

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

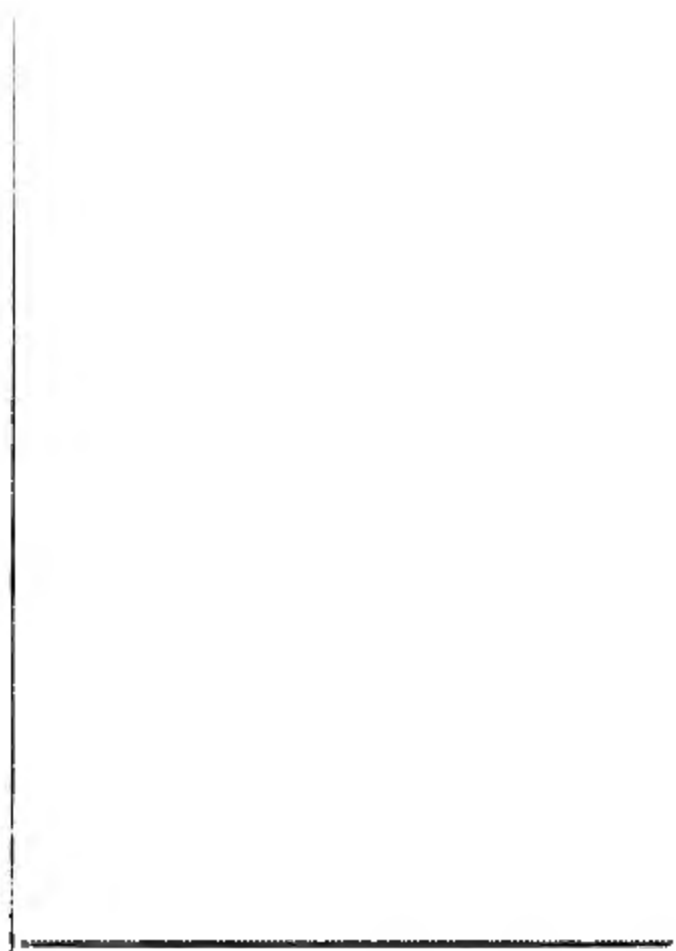

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

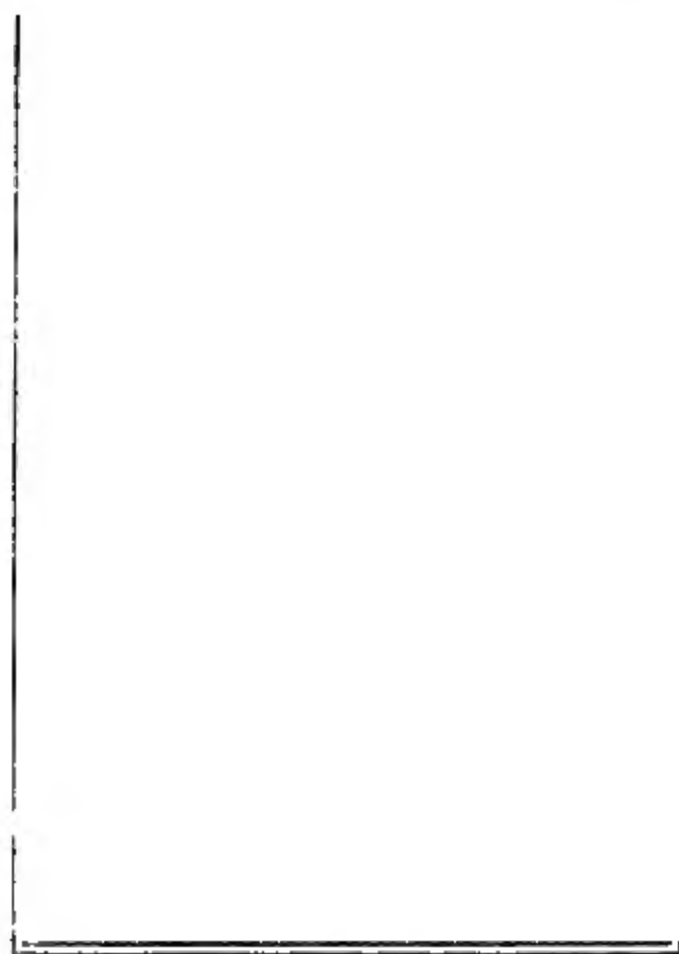

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. (1) Thoresby states that Edward Fairfax, Esq., lived at an ancient house near the Church (then Alderman Dixon's), where most of his children were born, and that he was an eminent Poet and author of several learned and ingenious Treatises (Ducatus, pp. 38 and 65). In 1741 the house belonged to Mr. Tim^o Smith; in 1756, to Mr. Gervas Smith, who died in 1760, unmarried, having settled his estates on Mr. Thos. Wilkinson, who sold it in 1761 to Mr. John Smith, and he re-edified it and built a new front to it.—Wilson's Notes. The wife of Edward Fairfax was Dorothy, daughter of Martin Laycock, of Leeds (Dugdale's Visitation, p. 156). His daughter Elizabeth was the wife of Philip Richardson. Dr. Collins has kindly given the following references:—Paver's Marriage Licenses: 1597-8, Edward Fairfax and Cath. Calverley, wid., of Otley. 1600-1, Edward Fairfax, Newhall, par. Otley, and Dorothy Laycock, of Leeds. And for an article on Edward Fairfax see Lays and Leaves of the Forest, by Thos. Parkinson, pp. 105 to 122; and for notes of his children, pp. 142-4.

(2) Afterwards Sir Ingram Hopton, Kt. He was slain 14 October, 1643, at Winsby Fight, near Horncastle, in Lincolnshire.—Ducatus, p. 187, and Wilson's Notes.

(1) Martin Laycock, of Leeds, and Eliz. Clapham, of Beamsley. (See Dugdale's Visitation, ed. Surtees Society, p. 156.) If she was daughter of George Clapham by Martha Heber, she could only have been eleven years old.—C.B.N.

(2) See Ibid., p. 20.

(3) Thomas Wilson was the founder of the family that so long occupied a prominent place in Leeds history. His grandson married Elizabeth, daughter of Richard Sykes, and thereby became brother-in-law of Ralph Thoresby, F.R.S. His great-grandson, Richard, was Recorder of Leeds from 1729 to 1761, and was succeeded by his son Richard, who died in 1776; brother of Dr. Christopher Wilson, Bishop of Bristol, whose representative is Andrew Montagu, Esq., of Ingmanthorpe. The bishop's brother William died Mayor of Leeds, 28th March, 1754, leaving an only child, wife of Thomas Norcliffe, Esq., of Langton. Other descendants of the bishop are Lord Grimthorpe and the well-known family of Beckett.—C.B.N.

(1) Apparently there was a considerable number of families living in the monastic buildings belonging to Kirkstall Abbey. In Thoresby's time some of the buildings were so used, for on p. 165 of the Ducatus he states, "The Roof has been off the Church ever since the Dissolution of the House; but the Dortoir, or Dormitory, and some other places that have been converted to private uses, are covered." In the third Book of Registers, 1612-19, the following families are described as being of the Abbey:—Bowmar, Bradforth, Couper, Crawe, Crosse, Foxcroft, Granger, Grundall, Gurney, Hall, Headley, Hinchcliffe, Longbottom, Marshall, Milburn, Mitchell, Morrill, Rishforth, Russell, Smith, Walker.

(1) See Note, p. 112. The first William Rosse mentioned in Dugdale's Visitacion was brother of Robert Roos, of Ingmanthorpe, who married Mary Strangeways. The Visitacion, 1612, p. 569, makes Peter Roos, of Laxton, to be their son, whereas he was husband of their grand-daughter Bridget, daughter of Robert, who is omitted altogether. Peter Roos (Adm'on 2nd March, 1605-6) was son of Francis Roos, of Laxton, whose will was proved 26th April, 1580. His sister Alice married Brian Stapleton, of Carlton, co. York, and Burton Joyce, co. Notts (Inq. p.m. 10th Eliz., 1568), and was buried 3rd Jan., 1595. Their only child, Jane Stapleton, married Sir William Fairfax, of Gilling, and was mother of Thomas, Viscount Emly, and grandmother of the Hon. Dorothy Fairfax, wife of Sir Thomas Norcliffe, of Langton, Knt.—C. B. N.

“He was famous in the Laws, was made a Judge [1742], and Knighted [1745] by King Geo: II.”

Sir Thomas died 8th September, 1765, without issue, having left his estate to his widow, who died 1st July, 1785. He was buried in Harewood Church, where there is a tablet with a long inscription to his memory. The trustees under Lady Denison's will purchased the manor and estate of Grimthorpe, which, under the provisions of her will, ultimately devolved upon Maria, only daughter of William Beverley; she being the great-grand-daughter of Mary Harrison, sister of Lady Denison, and wife of Stephen Harrison, of Stubhouse, near Harewood. Maria Beverley became the wife of Edmund Beckett 14th December, 1814, who assumed, 3th September, 1816, the surname and arms of Denison. He succeeded his brother, Sir Thomas Beckett, as fourth Bart. 17th November, 1872, when he discontinued the name of Denison. His son, Sir Edmund Beckett, fifth Bart., was created Baron Grimthorpe 17th Feb., 1886.—See Yorks. Arch. Journal, vol. ii., p. 207; Wilkinson's Worthies of Barnsley, pp. 84-5; and Herald and Genealogist, vol. viii., pp. 64 and 288.—G. D. L.

(1) Second son of Sir Arthur Ingram, Knight, the Elder, of Temple Newsam. His first wife, Anne, daughter and heiress of William Calverley, of Eccleshill, was buried in York Minster, 31st Oct., 1632. His daughter Mary, was buried 22nd Dec., 1634, at Holy Trinity, Goodramgate, York. What became of Elizabeth, I do not know; but she was probably the daughter mentioned in her father's Will.

He married, secondly, Dorothy, daughter of Sir Thomas Fairfax, Viscount Elmley, who re-married at the above church, 28th March, 1639, Sir Thomas Norcliffe, Knight, of Langton, had issue one son and seven daughters, and was buried at Langton the 18th of June, 1685, aged 65. Thomas Ingram, his nephew, married Mary, daughter of Sir Watkinson Payler, Bart., by the third daughter of Sir Thomas Norcliffe. She has an interesting Mural Monument in the Chancel of Langton. Sir Arthur Ingram, Knight, the Younger, his brother, married, for his second wife, the Honble. Katherine Fairfax, sister of the Honble. Dorothy, Lady Norcliffe.

I abstract Mr. Ingram's Will from the Probate in my possession:—

“John Ingram, of York, Esq. I would have my bodie decently buried, with torches, in the night. To my loving Father, my Silver bason and ewer, and the Lord blesse him. (2) Thoresby, in the MS. in the Society's possession, extracted this entry thus :—" Martin Leigh, of Houlbeck, Obadiah (ye present Vicar of Wakefield, '96), 25th July, '34."—See Atkinson's Thoresby, vol. i., p. 212. The Rev. Obadiah Lee, Magd. Coll., Camb., M.A., 1663, was Vicar of Kirkthorpe in 1658, curate of Wakefield in 1671, instituted Vicar, Feb. 16th, 1677-8, and was buried in Wakefield Church, 17th Sept., 1700. He was married (1) to Ann Sandford, 17th May, 1659, at Bolsover, Derbyshire; and (2) to Alice Denison, 1st April, 1661, at St. Andrew Hubbard, London. He had issue, Obadiah, born the 2nd and baptized at Wakefield the 14th June, 1671 (B.A., 1691, M.A., 1695, Clare Coll., Camb.; Lecturer of Wakefield Parish Church from 1698 to 1703, buried at Wakefield, Jan. 29th, 1702-3; had two children baptized at Wakefield—Sarah, 25th Jan., 1699-1700, and Elizabeth, 27th May, 1703); and James, bapt. at Wakefield, 16th Feb., 1675-6 (? Magd. Coll., Camb., B.A., 1695, M.A., 1699).—See 'Banks' Wakefield.'

Alice Denison was the dau. of William D., and was bapt. at Methley, 22nd January, 1636-7. Her brother, William, also bapt. at Methley, 24th June, 1635, was marr. to Sarah, dau. of Richard Richardson, of North Bierley, 4th August, 1665. In the marriage-licence, dated 1662, his age is stated to be 27, and her age 20. He was a Governor of Wakefield Grammar School, and by his Will, dated 18th Oct., 1684 (given in full in Taylor's Rectory Manor), he devised his property in Altofts and Wakefield to his nephews, Obadiah and James Lee. He died s.p. 13th Dec., 1684, and was buried at Wakefield Church, where, on a mural tablet to his memory, his arms are given as Argent, a bend between two fleurs-de-lis sable.

There was an earlier connection between the Lee and Denison families. On the 9th Feb., 1586-7, William Denison, of Wakefield, and Jennet Lee, of Fox Hill (Fox Holes, in Methley parish), were married at Normanton Church, where they had five children baptized, viz.:—Thomas, b. & d., 1587; Robert, b. 1589, d. 1633; Thomas, b. 1590-1, d. 1636; William, b. 1596, d. 1655-6; and John, b. 1604, d. 1658; the father then residing at Altofts and "Fox Hoile."

Will of William D., of Altofts, dated 1st Feb., 1646. He gave to his dau., Priscilly D., £100 two years after his decease, to be paid to William Clough his father-in-law, and his brother John D., for her use, one moiety of residue to son William D., and remainder to daughters Mary D. and Alice D. Tuition of dau. Priscilly to her grandfather William Clough, and of son William to John Hopkinson (? the antiquary) and John D., and of daughter Alice to John D. (Proved 11th Feb., 1655-6, by his son William.)

This is a noted Author, of much Credit with Historians. [Marginal note.]

(1) John Nalson, M.A., Rector of Walkington, and Vicar of Holbeck, married Sarah, daughter of Thomas Sharp, of Little Horton, near Bradford (See Whitaker's Loidis and Elmet, p. 354); had issue—Mary, baptized at Leeds, 20th Nov., 1634; Sarah, baptized 9th March, 1635-6; and John. John Nalson, baptized as above, was LL.D., Camb., 1678, Rector of Doddington in the Isle of Ely, and prebendary of Ely, 1684; married Alice Peyton, had issue Valentine Nalson and nine other children; died 24th March, 1685-6, and buried at Ely, M.I. His Will is in Chester Waters' Chesters of Chicheley, I., 320. He was the writer of several royalist pamphlets, but his most important work was the "Impartial Collection of the Great Affairs of State, from the beginning of the Scotch Rebellion in the year 1639, to the murder of King Charles I." For an account of his life and writings see the Dictionary of National Biography.

Valentine Nalson, born 1683; St. John's, Camb., B.A., 1702; M.A., 1711; was Vicar of St. Martin's, Coney Street, York, 1719 [buried there 28th Feb., 1722-3—C.B.N.]; and Prebendary of Ripon, 1711.

Wilson's MS. states that the first mentioned, John Nalson, was the son of John Nalson, of Methley, but the Methley registers are not conclusive on this point.

(1) Thoresby states that Mr. Todd was the first Incumbent of St. John's Church, so the first that was baptized and the first that was buried there were out of his own family; the other Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was celebrated at this church only during his time. Dr. Whitaker adds that it was revived by the then late Incumbent, on which occasion a new set of Plate was purchased, and the old, of which the Chalice was contemporary with the consecration of the church, was bought by him for the Chapel of Holme.—Ducatus, 2nd ed., p. 29. On the 10th of this month he was instituted Vicar of Ledsham, where his son Cornelius was born.—Thoresby MS.

VOLUME IV.

MISCELLANEA

CONSISTING OF PARTS PUBLISHED IN 1892, 1893, AND 1895.

PREFACE.

THE Council of the Thoresby Society have pleasure in presenting to the Members the second volume of the "Miscellanea," consisting of the "Miscellaneous" parts published for 1892, 1893, and 1895, and forms the fourth volume of the Society's publications. It is hoped that the papers it contains may be of interest to the general reader, and may furnish useful material to those who desire to enter into a closer study of the history and antiquities of the Leeds district.

The thanks of the Council and Members are due to the contributors of the various papers. The completion of the S kyrack Hearth-Tax Return of 1672 furnishes a serviceable addition to available genealogical materials for the seventeenth century. The charters and returns relating to the possessions of Kirkstall Abbey, in Chapeltown and elsewhere, and the fifteenth-century document, known as the "Fundacio Abbathie de Kyrke-stall," now first appearing in print in full, have important bearing on the history of the Abbey, the study of which must always be a leading feature in the operations of the Society. The Council are glad to welcome new contributors in Mr. Richard Holmes, Mr. Paley Baildon, Professor Bodington, Mr. Thomas Marshall, and others, whose papers will be read with interest, and who, it is hoped, may assist in many future numbers.

It is expected that the next volume of the "Miscellanea" will contain an article on Kirkstall Abbey, by Mr. St. John Hope, Secretary of the Society of Antiquaries, London. Mr. Baildon's "Muster Rolls" will also be completed. A paper on the history of the Streets of Leeds is in preparation. The series of articles relating to the Villages adjacent to Leeds will be continued, and other contributions of interest are promised.

REPORT OF THE COUNCIL,

Presented to the Society at the Fourth Annual Meeting, held 27th April, 1893.

DURING the past twelve months the most important fact in the history of Leeds has been its elevation to the rank of a city. The event seems appropriate for notice in the report of the local Historical Society, and, it is to be hoped, may quicken public interest in our past municipal history.

Since the last Report was submitted, the Society has continued its system of excursions to places of historic interest in the district, by visiting the battlefield of Towton and the demesne of Temple Newsam. Each excursion also included the inspection of adjacent buildings of note: in the first excursion, Saxton Church and Lead Chapel; and in the second, Whitkirk Church and Austhorpe Lodge. The members were again indebted to their Honorary Secretary, Mr. Morkill, for the interesting addresses and descriptions he gave on each occasion.

It is hoped that in addition to the Summer Excursions, which will be continued this year, arrangements may be made for a series of winter meetings, for the reading of papers, and other objects associated with the work of the Society.

As regards the Publications, Parts III., both of the "Miscellanea" and the "Leeds Parish Church Registers," completing the Society's first two volumes, have been issued. Further matter for the following volumes is now in hand, and a portion has been printed off. The Council have pleasure in reporting that the Rev. C. H. Owen, rector of Adel, has given permission for the Society to publish the earlier portion of his Parish Registers, which date back to 1606. It is to be hoped that other incumbents in the neighbourhood may be induced to follow the example thus set by the Vicar of Leeds and the Rector of Adel. It is scarcely necessary to allude to the importance of preserving in this way the contents of our old Parish Registers from risk of destruction.

Two interesting manuscripts have been added to the Library, namely : An Account and Note Book in the handwriting of John Thoresby and Ralph Thoresby, presented by Mr. H. Elwin Hyde; and an Account Book in the handwriting of James Torre, the antiquary, and his widow, Ann Torre, presented by Mr. Charles Graham.

The thanks of the Council and of the Society are due to the Leeds Corporation for the continued use of a room in the Municipal Buildings; to the various contributors to the Publications; and to the workers for the Society.

The Treasurer's financial statement accompanies this Report, and as no complete statement has hitherto been issued, it has been thought well that that now presented should embrace the income and expenditure of the Society from its formation in 1889 to the end of 1892. From this statement it will be seen that there has been an increase in the number of Members, but it does not show the large accession of new Subscribers which has recently been the result of the efforts of a few Members, and especially of one of the Honorary Secretaries, since many of those who have recently joined have either subscribed for the previous years or have but taken the places of original members who have withdrawn. The Council much regret the fact that many of those who joined at the first have lost interest in the work of the Society, and they desire to urge upon every Member the importance of obtaining additional subscribers. It is believed that there are many persons interested in the history of Leeds who would be glad to join the Society if its advantages were made known to them; and when it is remembered how large a proportion of the Society's income is expended in printing, the advantage of increasing the number of Members becomes obvious, and is one which in all existing Members participate.

The accounts are prepared in such a form as to show, as far as possible, the income and expenditure for each year, and it will be seen that there are funds in hand sufficient to defray the expense of printing the Publications for 1891 and 1892.

The Council regret the delay in the issue of the Publications, but they rely with confidence upon the indulgence of Members in this respect. The funds of the Society are debited with the cost of printing only. The labour of transcribing, which is very great, is undertaken voluntarily by a few Members, who can devote only their leisure time to this work; hence delay is at times unavoidable. And in addition to this, further delay is occasioned this year by the printing of the Index, for the preparation of which the Members are indebted to the Rev. Edw. Cookson, of Ipswich, who has personally undertaken this laborious duty.

Though the number of subscribers to this Society proves the general interest in the work undertaken, it is possible that a more active co-operation on the part of those who receive the Publications might ensure a greater efficiency in the work. At the beginning of our existence, numerous Sections were instituted, with respective subjects. These Sections, it is to be regretted, have lapsed into non-existence, and perhaps not without reason. The various points of attack were so many; the forces, individually, so small. If, however, a method could be followed which would draw all those interested at the first on to a common frontage, it might be possible afterwards to make sub-divisions, and treat special subjects in detail with greater efficiency. The work of an Archæological Society is emphatically one of research and collection. It is consequently clear that the efficiency of such a Society is relative, to a large extent, to the facilities of reference in the possession of its Members. As a young Society, the Thoresby Society cannot pretend to possess all works of reference with regard to Leeds, but the Council propose to ask the assistance of the Members of the Society to compile, in the first place, a Bibliography of Leeds; in the second, to carry out a more ambitious project of cataloguing authorities on every subject connected with antiquarian research. It is apparent that the second scheme will include the first, and, however incomplete, will provide invaluable assistance to the antiquarian inquirer.

The principle of card catalogues, as in vogue in many public libraries, will enable the officers of the Society to keep such an index of authorities absolutely up to date with all contributions to the list sent by members assisting, and will enable them to enter one authority in as many forms as necessary, under name, subject, or sub-division of subject. In furtherance of this scheme, all Members are asked to send to the editor of the "Miscellanea," Thoresby Society, Municipal Buildings, Leeds, any reference that they may meet with to a history, subject, topographical detail, or archæological question, stating: (a) Name of author; (b) Title of work; (c) Publisher and date; and (d) the Subject or subjects of which it forms the authority ; to sign the communication, and procure the verification and signature of someone similarly interested. This course will materially aid the Librarian in the selection of books, afford facilities for research to inquirers in any particular line, and, the Council hopes, increase the interest and assistance of all the Members of the Society. It has been often said that the man who makes an Index gives more valuable work to the world than the discoverer of a planet; and it may not be too audacious to conjecture that the Thoresby Society may frame, in some sort, not only a Catalogue of matters touching its immediate interests, but collect a list of authorities on archæological subjects to which appeals may be made by many outside its circle. It is hoped that this scheme may commend itself to our Members (all of whom can give assistance), and even go so far as to "supply a want long felt."

NOTES TO THE "HEARTH-TAX."

- "OMITTED BY REASON OF POVERTY."—"DISCHARGED BY CERTIFICATE."—An exemption was allowed to every one who, "by reason of poverty or the smallness of his estate," was exempted from church and poor-rates, or who could produce a certificate of the minister and one of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish to prove the annual value of the house he lived in to be not more than 20s., and that neither he nor any other person using the house occupied lands, tenements, goods, and chattels to the value of 10/.
- "COLLECTOR."—In 1664 the collection of this tax was placed in the hands of officers to be appointed by the king. The tax was hateful because . . . it was farmed.
- "CONSTABLE."—The tax was assessed on an account or return made by the occupier, etc., after receiving notice from the "constable, head-borough, tithing-man, or other such officer within whose precinct the house was situated." The local officer to whom the occupier was to render his account was required to enter the house and verify the account, and in default of account, was to assess the tax on his own view.

DOWELL (History of Taxes, 1884), vol. iii., book iii., chap. ii.

THE Possessions of Kirkstall Abbey
IN LEEDS.

THE following extract, showing the possessions of Kirkstall Abbey in the town of Leeds at the Dissolution, is taken from the Roll No. 174 of the "Ministers' Accounts" 31-32 Hen. VIII., now in the Public Record Office, London. The Roll is a return of the income accruing to the Crown from all the properties of the Abbey, in the first year after the Dissolution.¹ It covers several skins of parchment, and gives full particulars of the various tenancies, with the names of the tenants, and the rents and services severally due by them. It is, therefore, a document of importance to the local historian and genealogist,—not to speak of the larger bearing which, in common with the other rolls of the same series, it has on the general economic and social history of the nation.

The Thoresby Society may very appropriately in its future publications print the whole of this interesting roll, which is so closely connected with the topography of the neighbourhood. The Leeds portion, though here printed first, does not occupy the first or most important position in the original. Mr. Wheeler, in his notes to the Kirkstall Abbey Rent-roll of 1459, printed in Vol. I. of these Miscellanea, remarked on the smallness of the possessions of the Monastery in the town of Leeds itself. The only entry in that rent-roll under the head of "Ledes" is a free rent of sixpence, due annually by William Scott. But at the Dissolution, eighty years later, it will be seen that the Leeds rents and farms had increased to £16 4s. 0d.: a sum which, though much less than the revenues from the great possessions of the House in some of the neighbouring villages—Chapelton or Horsforth or Bramley, for instance, was yet for that period considerable. If the 1459 roll be complete, the properties in Leeds must have been acquired during this last period of the Abbey's existence, when its financial position had probably become an easy one. It will be noticed that a large proportion of the properties are demised "by copy of Court Roll," indicating that they were held on a copyhold tenure. It had become a frequent practice during the 15th century for persons or corporations of means to invest money in the purchase of copyholds.¹ The King being lord of the Manor of Leeds, on the acquisition by him of these properties at the Dissolution the copyhold tenure was extinguished, and their subsequent history is not to be looked for in the Manor rolls. Some of them remained with the Crown for a considerable time. Others were possibly among the lands purchased in 36 Hen. VIII. by William Ramsden of Longley, whose great acquisitions of Abbey lands laid the foundation of the fortunes of the Ramsden family.

Most of the surnames in the roll are still familiar in the district. All of them appear in the earliest remaining parish registers of Leeds, and nearly all are still represented in the city. It is noticeable, however, that, with one exception, none of these names appear in the Poll-Tax return of 1379 for the town of Leeds, although most of them are in the returns of neighbouring villis.

The original roll from which this extract is taken is written in the usual contracted Latin. It has been thought better to give a translation here.

Leds. The account of Henry Mason, collector.

ARREARS.—None, because the first account.

RENTS AND FERMS.—Account rendered of £6 4s. 0d. of the ferm of one tenement in Litle Wodehouse and all the lands and tenements appertaining to the same, with the appurtenances in Ledre Woodehouse aforesaid, so demised to John Mokson by copy of Court roll: payable at the terms of St. Martin in winter and Whitsuntide by equal portions.²

(1) See Thorold Rogers' Six Centuries of Work and Wages, p. 288 (ed. 1889).

(2) Thoresby says (Duc., p. 97) that Little Woodhouse was in the Crown until the reign of Elizabeth, who sold it to one Kendal: his grandson sold it to Mr. Harrison

And of 27s. 2d. of the rent of two closes called Water Leys, one close called Newelands, and five acres of land lying in the fields there, so in the tenure of Thomas Hardewik,¹ this year, payable, &c.

And of 32s. 8d. of the ferm of one acre of land with the building thereon erected, with the appurtenances, in Led^e aforesaid, situate and lying on Milnhill, and two closes five acres and three roods of land with the appurtenances there, so demised to John Seyll by copy of Court roll, payable at the said terms.

And of 9s. 3d. of the ferm of 9 acres and one rood of arable land lying in the fields of Litlewoodehouse, so demised to Alexander Burton,² by copy of Court roll, payable at the said terms.

And of 22s. 2d. of the ferm of the moiety of one messuage, as it lies in Kirkgate in Led^e aforesaid, one little close in Led^e Wros,³ three roods of land lying on Galohill abutting on the lane beside le Burmantofts, payable at the said terms, so demised to James Mathewe, by copy of Court roll.

And of 13s. 4d. of the ferm of two shops with the buildings over, lying at the head of the Fleshambles of Led^e, with their appurtenances in Led^e aforesaid, payable, &c., so demised to Thomas Wilson by copy of Court roll.

who built the new Church. Much of the land was devoted by John Harrison to the endowment of St. John's. From the amount of this ferm as compared with others, it appears that the lands held by John Mokson or Moxon must have been of considerable extent: the rent from Chapel Allerton Grange, with the lands, was only £4 7s. 0d., and from Moor Grange and lands £6 13s. 4d.

(1) This may have been Thomas Hardwick, whose will was proved 1557, or Thomas Hardwick who purchased the lordship of Potter Newton a few years after the date of this return, and died 1577. See Duc., p. 122.

(2) Alexander Burton appears to have been a man of considerable substance. In the subsidy of 1524 he was taxed 9s. for goods: only six persons in Leeds paid a higher sum. Besides the above-named land, he held a house and lands at Headingley-cum-Burley, from the Abbey.

(3) In the Survey of Leeds in 1341 Thomas le Wayte held by free tenure a place of land called Le Wros containing by estimation two acres. John del Wro appears in the poll tax returns for Allerton Gledhow 1379. In the Minister's Account from which the present extract is taken "Led^e Wroo" is among the Chapel Allerton Woods. The Gallow hill was at the Black Bank, York Road.

And of 20s. of one burgage in Briggate of Ledġ aforesaid, and one close adjacent thereto called Newleys with the appurtenances there, payable, &c., so demised to George Symson by copy of Court roll.

And of 8s. of the ferm of one close there called Calfall,¹ payable, &c., so demised to John Brigge and Edmund Calvley by copy of Court roll.

And of 8s. of the ferm of two acres of land lying in Ledġ tofts, with the appurtenances, payable, &c., so [demised to] John Baynes by copy of Court roll.

And of 33s. 4d. of the ferm of half of one messuage which lies beside the cross in the market place of Ledġ, and one close with one acre lying on le Burmantofts, and two acres of land lying in Woodehousefelde on the Towne Cliffe, payable, &c., so demised to Henry Brayme by copy of Court roll.

And of 16d. of the rent of half an acre of enclosed land, lying beside le Cokplace,² and abutting upon Churll medowe there, in the tenure of William Marshall this year, payable, &c.

And of 20d. of the rent of one rood of meadow lying in Burmantofte, abutting on the lane there, in the tenure of Richard Fawconer this year, payable, &c.

And of 12d. of the rent of half an acre of land lying within the close called Nelgraffe³ there, in the tenure of Thomas Geffrayson, chaplain, this year, payable, &c.

And of 12d. of the rent of half an acre of land lying within a close called Woodehouseclose there, in the tenure of Alice Warde, widow, this year, payable, &c.

And of 8d. of the rent of four butts of land containing by estimation half an acre, lying at Shepcote⁴ Brigge, in the tenure of Thomas Rodes this year, payable, &c.

(1) Perhaps equivalent to Callbank or Callbrow. See Duc., p. 79.

(2) "Le Cokplace" may have been the scene of the cock-fighting or cock-throwing pastimes. I believe the Churl meadow was adjacent to the Woodhouse Cliff fields. See Leeds Parish Registers, p. 75.

(3) Nelgrave, near Sheepscar Bridge.

(4) Perhaps a mistake for Sheep Carr.

And of 4*d.* of the rent of a parcel of land lying beside the Cokplace, in the tenure of John Hargrave this year, payable, &c.

And of 19*s.* 4*d.* of the ferm of one tenement with the close and all the lands and tenements adjacent to the same, with the appurtenances, in Buslyngethorpe in Led*e* aforesaid, payable at the said terms, so demised to Margaret Ramsdaye widow, by copy of Court roll.

And of 9*d.* of the rent of three roods of land lying in Woodehouse Felde, called Wete lands,¹ so in the tenure of Thomas Kirk this year, payable, &c.

Summa totalis £16 4*s.* 0*d.*

SALE OF WOOD.—Of any sale of wood there made this year, to wit, within a wood there called Menstone Banke containing by estimation four acres, lying in a close on the north of a certain lane leading from Burley towards Led*e*, he accounts not, inasmuch as no sale was made there this year, &c.

(1) Thoresby (Duc., p. 90) mentions the "Whitelands" at Great Woodhouse.

CHARTERS

Possessions of Kirkstall Abbey in Allerton.

I.

These Charters were presented to the Corporation of Leeds in 1892 by Colonel Dixon, of Astle Hall, Cheshire. They had come into his family together with land in Allerton, and the present holder of them, very generously and wisely, has returned them to the locality to which they refer. By the courtesy of the Corporation of Leeds, access has been granted, and copies have been made, which retain faithfully the spelling of the words and names.

The Society is indebted to J. P. Earwaker, Esq., F.S.A. (who was the first to call attention to their existence, in his History of East Cheshire), for the approximate dates to be found in the margin.

Incomplete copies of certain of these Charters have appeared in print before this date, notably in Whitaker's Loidis and Elmete (p. 123, ed. 1816), with the addition of a description of considerable length; but in this case it has been considered advisable to reproduce all, in order to provide as complete a chapter of information as possible with regard to one section of the lands of Kirkstall Abbey, and to furnish material of study to those members of our Society who are working at the history of the Abbey by printing the Dixon Charters immediately, rather than to incur the unavoidable loss of time necessary for careful editing and explanation. The condition of the Charters varies from very good to very bad. A collotype is included in this number, reproducing two excellent examples. It may be added that Col. Dixon still retains other Charters of the same age relating to Allerton, which may be printed on another occasion.

The Council desires to record its appreciation of the example of generosity in matters of this kind set by Col. Dixon, and of the action of the Corporation of Leeds in allowing access to them, and at the same time ventures to express a hope that at a future date the Corporation will see its way to allow the Society—the body most interested in such possessions—to hold and exhibit these Charters as custodians for the Corporation.

Pampocalia.

IT is probable that the curiosity of many students of antiquity in this district has been aroused by the occurrence on the Ordnance Map of the strange name "Pompocal," in close proximity to the village of Bardsey. The object of the present paper is to state the source from which the name is derived, and to point out the defect of evidence for regarding it as the ancient name of a station near to Bardsey, or, indeed, any ascertainable Roman station at all. The name "Pompocal" is an Ordnance Map variant for "Pampocalia," which appears as the name of a Roman town or station once, and once only, in a writing of antiquity, the "Cosmographia" of the anonymous writer of Ravenna. This "Cosmographia" is a geographical work, of uncertain date, written at Ravenna, probably towards the end of the 7th century of the Christian era,¹ shortly after the establishment of the Bulgarians on the south of the Danube in 678. The original appears to have been written in Greek, but the work is only known to us through a Latin version. It must further be observed that it is not an itinerary, but a treatise on geography. Various considerations lead to the conclusion that the writer of it had before him ancient maps, similar to the well-known Peutinger Table, and that his lists of names were based upon these. The "Cosmographia" was first published in the year 1688, by a French Benedictine monk, Placide Porcheron, in an octavo volume, Anonymi Ravennatis qui circa sæculum vii. vixit, De Geographia libri quinque. Porcheron derived his text from a MS. in the King's Library at Paris. A few years later a copy of another MS. of the same work, preserved in the Vatican Library at Rome, came into the hands of the well-known Thomas Gale, Dean of York, who designed to use it for an edition which he was preparing of the Iter Britanniarum Commentariis Illustratum. He died, however, in 1702, leaving his work unfinished; and in 1709 his son, Roger Gale, published the Antonine Itineraries, with an appendix containing the Ravenna work, based upon the Paris and the Vatican MSS. In a portion of this work, which relates to Britain, the following list of names occurs:—

Now, of the identification of several of these stations there is no doubt; others have been identified with more or less probability. But in so far as identifications have been established, these civitates and castra, as the Ravenna writer terms them, all belong to Yorkshire, Lancashire, Cumberland, Durham, and Northumberland. On this ground it is only natural to look for the site of Pampocalia in one of these counties.

Is there any further ground for assigning a more precise site to Pampocalia? Let us observe the names which occur in proximity to it upon the list. The position of Bresnetaci vet. is almost certain, but that of Lagentium is more doubtful. Similarity of name has inclined antiquaries to identify it with the Lagecium of the 8th Itinerary of Antoninus, where the order—Lagecium, Danum, Agelocum, Lindum—indicates that Lagecium is identical with the Roman station which stood at the point where the north road crossed the Aire, and this was doubtless at Castleford. In the 5th Itinerary of Antoninus the name Lagecium appears as Legeolium. The ground, then, upon which a site has been found for Pampocalia in this district, is that in a list which appears to be drawn up without accurate correspondence with any local order, Pampocalia occurs immediately prior to the station which has been identified with Castleford, although the name which precedes it, if identifiable at all, is that not of a Yorkshire but of a Lancashire station. Slight though this basis was to work upon, it was sufficient for the enthusiastic zeal of the antiquarians of two centuries ago. Thus, in the Ducatus Leod. Thoresby writes, when treating of the antiquities of Adel:—"What the name of this station was I cannot divine. The very learned Dr. Gale some years ago gave me notice from an anonymous geographer of a station in these parts, called Pampocalia, which he thought should be read Campocalia, and had sent to France for various lectures, concluding, 'Where to place this I know not, but my hopes are that you will be so happy as to find it, and so kind as to communicate the discovery.' Now, considering that the said Ravennate geographer . . . places this Pampo- or Campo-calia the very next station to Lagentium, or Legeolium, it seems not improbable that this camp or station" (i.e., Adel) "was the very place, but because things so many ages past admit of various conjectures, I will offer another, which I am induced to from the similitude of the names, the Agel- or Adel-ocum of the ancients, and the present Adle or Adel."

I need hardly say that while there is no objection save the total absence of evidence to the identification of Adel with Pampocalia, the identification of it with the Adelocum or Segelocum of the Itinerary is rebutted by arguments of decisive weight.

Horsley's conjecture was somewhat different. "Pampocalia and Lagentium I take to be the same with Calcaria and Lagecium in the Itinerary, i.e., Tadcaster and Castleford, near Pontefract, in Yorkshire."¹

While, however, speculative antiquaries were thus hazarding their guesses, the map-maker was at work, definitely assigning in the Map of Yorkshire to "Pampocalia" the position which it occupies at the present day. In 1728, a "New Map of the County of York" was published, "laid down from an actual survey," &c., printed for and sold by Phil. Overton and Thomas Bowles. In this map Pampocalia appears between Bardsey and Thorner, but nearer to the latter. It is marked as though it were an important, recognized, well-defined Roman station, and this lively flight of imagination is supported by the creation of a high-road running from Collingham Bridge, through Bardsey, through Pampocalia and Thorner, past Austthrop Hall, just to the east of Temple Newsam, over the Aire at Woodlesford, through Methley Park, and so forth southward. This road was as much the creation of the imagination as the Roman station. But having once made its way into the maps, it long remained there. If you will refer to Bowen's Map, dated 1750, you will find it carried from E. Hickleton to Boroughbridge, under the name Ricknield Street, and termed a Roman way. It is made to pass through Nostell Priory grounds, Medley Bridge grounds, just east of Whitchurch, between Winmoor and Barwick, through Thorner, Pampocalia, and away north. All this is pure delusion. The real course of the Roman road northward is,

(1) Britannia Romana, 1732.

and always has been, perfectly well known. It crossed the Aire at Castleford, ran through Aberford and Bramham to the Wharfe, which it crossed at St. Helen's ford, thence pursued its course northwards along what is still known as the Rudgate, or Ridge-way. This is the account given by Leland, who calls it, you will observe, Wateling Street. "Wateling Street lyeth straite over Castleford Bridge. Thence to Aberford v. miles, partely by low medow, but most after by good high plaine corne ground. . . . I never saw yn any Parte of England so manifest tokens as heere of the large high crest of the way of Wateling Streate made by hand. Aberford is a poore thoroughfare on Wateling Streat. . . . Tadcaster standeth on the hither Ripe of Warfe river, and is a good thoroughfare. . . . Tadcaster standith a mile from Wateling Streate, that tendith more towards Cairlvel, & crossith over Warfe at a place caullid St. Helenesford, a mile and a half above Tadcaster; and on the other Ripe is S. Helenes Chapelle."¹

Camden, Hearne, and, so far as I know, all other antiquaries have agreed this was the course of the Roman road between Legeolium and Isurium. I doubt whether there are any sufficient indications of a parallel road in this part of Yorkshire which would run through Thorner and Bardsey. The existing road from Thorner to Bardsey was, I believe, constructed in or about 1826. The most careful 18th century map of Yorkshire which I have been able to discover is one engraved by Thomas Jeffreys in 1771. It is executed after surveys made in 1767-70, and represents, I believe with accuracy, the roads as they existed at that time. In it the great road marked in Overton and Bowes' and Bowen's Maps, as running from South Yorkshire northward through Thorner and Bardsey, entirely disappears.

While, however, I do not find traces of a Roman road running through the supposed Pampocalia from north to south, I fully admit that the Roman cross road which seems to run from Ilkley, through Adel, to Tadcaster, passed through Scarcroft, and close to the site of the "Pompocal" of the Ordnance Map. A piece of the road can, I believe, still be traced in a field at Scarcroft, and there appear to me to be traces of a Roman camp in a field upon "Rowley's Farm," adjoining the highroad. These facts make it without doubt conceivable that a Roman station may have existed on this spot, and that it may have been called Pampocalia. But of the existence of such a station there is no evidence, and, even were it otherwise, there would be no ground for identifying it with the Pampocalia of the Ravenna list. The ridiculous and misleading "Pompocal" ought to disappear from the Ordnance Map. Whether a place called Pampocalia ever existed may well be doubted. The "Cosmographia" of the anonymous writer of Ravenna is a corrupt document, drawn up, in all likelihood, by an ignorant monk. In these circumstances, Pampocalia may be a corruption either of some name still extant, such as Campodunum, or of some name now lost to the world. If Pampocalia be indeed the true reading, we must probably regard it as of Celtic origin, and refer the first syllable to the root pump, which, as Dr. Guest has shown, was once a dissyllable, in which form it is found in such a word as pempedoula = cinquefoil. The termination is doubtless ablatival, following in this respect a not uncommon Latin usage; c.f. Derrentione, Magnis, &c., in the Ravenna list, and such well-known forms as Ponte, Scaldis, Treveris, &c.

(1) Leland's Itin., ed. Hearne, pp. 43, 44.

I fear that I have occupied a good deal of space with a very small piece of negative criticism. Yet if in the course of it some little light has been thrown upon the methods of over-zealous antiquaries and map-makers, and some distrust inspired as to the value of those indications of antiquities which have found their way somewhat too easily into our Ordnance Surveys, this little paper will not have been written wholly in vain.

In printing the above paper, I desire to acknowledge my obligations to Mr. F. Haverfield, who has most kindly read my MS., and has made two or three suggestions by which I have profited. I ought also to say that a friendly critic, who has written in a local paper under the initials "J. F. C.," thinks that traces do exist of a Roman road which crossed the Aire at Woodlesford, and thence went northward in the direction of Scholes, Thorner, and Bardsey. He produces, however, no evidence of the existence of such a road north of the neighbourhood of Whitkirk, and while he suggests that the map-makers may have been justified by indications in the last century, the silence of Thoresby and other writers is strong negative testimony.

REPORT FOR 1893.

THE Council of the Thoresby Society have the pleasure to present their Fifth Annual Report. During the past year the Society has made steady progress, although the Council regret that they have been unable to issue the publications with more promptitude. They hope, however, during 1894, to redeem themselves to some extent in this respect, as they have been able to authorise the publications for 1893 and 1894 to be proceeded with simultaneously.

For 1893, it is intended to issue a portion of the "Calverley Charters," edited by Messrs. Saml. Margerison and W. Paley Baildon, F.S.A., and a further part of the second volume of "Miscellanea," edited by Mr. E. K. Clark; and for 1894 the first portion of the Kirkstall Abbey Coucher Book, edited by Mr. W. T. Lancaster, and a portion of the "Adel Registers." Owing to the transcription of the "Leeds Registers" being undertaken by only two or three members, the Council will not be in a position to print a further portion for some time, unless additional assistance is forthcoming.

During 1893, eighteen new members have been elected and the number of members now on the Roll is 248, which 39 are Life, and 209 Ordinary.

The Council purchased for the Society, at the Turn sale, Thoresby's own annotated copy of the "Ducatus."

Amongst the gifts to the Society may be mentioned MS. copy of a "Directory for Leeds in 1796," with copious notes by Mr. William Wheater, from Mr. Rhodes Hebblethwaite; a MS. book of "Extracts from the Record Office relating to Leeds, by the late Mr. Whitwam, purchased by some members of the Society with the object of rendering a little assistance to his widow; also, Thoresby's annotated copy of Torre's "Antiquities of York," presented by a few members of the Council. They have also received presents of books, pamphlets, and prints, too numerous to be mentioned in this report.

The members of the Society visited, on July 1st, Pocklington, Bardsey, and Harewood; on July 29th, Leathley, Swinsty, and Otley; on September 9th, Pontefract and Birkin; and on September 28th, Kirkstall Abbey; the arrangements for which were undertaken by Messrs. Clarson, Denison, Kitson, and Bedford.

Two interesting papers have been read before the Society: on November 14th, "A note on the Identification of Bardsey with Pampocalia, and a note on the Inscription of a Roman Altar dredged up near Castleford," by Professor Bodington; and on December 12th, a paper on "English Armour from the Conquest to the Restoration," by the Rev. W. Kerr Smith.

The Council desire to express their thanks to these gentlemen, and hope to arrange further meetings and excursions of a similar character during 1894.

Obituary.

THE Council regret to have to record the fact that since the formation of the Society, in 1889, it has lost by death the following 13 members, those marked thus (*) being Life Members:—

*BOYNE, WM., F.S.A.	Via Garibaldi, Florence.
*COMPSTON, THOS. BOWSER	8, Bank Street, Leeds.
DENISON, NOEL	St. Stephen's Club, Westminster.
DAVIS, JAS. WM., F.S.A.	Chevin Edge, Halifax.
HALL, FREDERICK	St. Mark's House, Leeds.
LANDON, Rev. JAS. T. B.	Ledsham Vicarage, South Milford.
LEWTHWAITE, Rev. GEO.	Adel.
LUPTON, JOHN	Moorlands, Headingley.
MOORE, RICHARD WM.	3, Woodhouse Square, Leeds.
OGDEN, JNO. MAUDE	Ellescope House, Sunderland.
PEBODY, CHARLES	Towerhurst, Leeds.
RUSBY, JAMES	18, Oppidans Road, Regent's Park, London, N.W.
WILSON, LUCY	34, Bolingbroke Grove, London, S.W.

Of these one, at least, deserves more than a passing reference.

Mr. WILLIAM BOYNE, F.S.A.,

was born in Leeds early in the present century, and for many years carried on business as a tobacco manufacturer. In 1853 he retired from business, and he afterwards spent some years in travelling in Spain, Italy, Greece, Egypt, and South Africa, and collecting valuable antiquities for his Museum.

After some years' residence in London, Mr. Boyne was induced to quit his native country for the more genial climate of Southern Europe. He lived for some time at Nice, and finally took up his abode at Florence. From these circumstances it is probable that he was personally known to but few of the members of the Thoresby Society, and seemed to them to belong to a former generation.

More than half-a-century ago, Mr. Boyne began to interest himself in the early history of the town and neighbourhood of Leeds; and though at that time comparatively few persons in Leeds cared for such things, his house in Queen's Square was a meeting-place for those few. In 1846 he became a member of the Leeds Philosophical and Literary Society, before whose members he read papers on "Numismatology" and the "Antiquities of Cornwall;" and on his leaving Leeds he was elected an Honorary Member, and he was also elected a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries. His works on "Tradesmen's Tokens" are well known. The first volume, published in 1858, comprised the Tokens issued in England, Wales, and Ireland; a second, in 1866, was confined to "Silver Tokens;" and in 1870 "Yorkshire Tokens" formed the subject of a third volume.

In the Yorkshire Library Mr. Boyne gave an account of books relating to his native county; and he was mainly instrumental in the publication of "Reliquiæ Antiquæ Eboracenses," an illustrated antiquarian journal, of which a few parts only were issued.

Though he left England many years ago, he continued to the last to interest himself in Antiquarian pursuits, and was well known as an industrious collector of antiquities. He became a Life Member of our Society in 1891, recognising the advantage which a permanent Society has over an individual as a Collector. Mr. Boyne died at Florence, on the 18th of November, 1893, at the age of 79.

Excursions, 1893.

THE Society in 1893 arranged for four Excursions in the neighbourhood of Leeds, in the place of two which had been previously held each year since the Society's birth; and hope in coming years to be able to maintain this number—perhaps ultimately to increase it. This can only be done by the active co-operation of members who wish to avail themselves of these excellent opportunities of seeing the numerous places of archæological interest with which this part of Yorkshire abounds; and we would here point out to members the importance of intimating their intention of being present at any particular Excursion as early as possible, by which means the difficulties of arrangement would be considerably lessened. Wishes have been expressed that the Society should go further afield, but the object of the Council has hitherto been as far as possible to confine their operations to Leeds and the neighbourhood, and to such Excursions as could conveniently be carried out on a Saturday afternoon. The Council hope, however, to organize at some future date whole-day Excursions to more distant places.

The First Excursion was held on Saturday, July 1st, in most beautiful weather. The party drove to Pompocali, a supposed Roman camp, on Hatchhill, to the east of and overlooking Bardsey. Here Mr. E. K. Clark called attention to the extraordinary character of the name, the paucity of authority, and the impossibility of derivation. He suggested that the distinct traces of a Roman road from Tadcaster to Adel were closely consistent with the theory adduced by Professor Ransome—of a chain of forts connecting the Aire and Wharfe at a point where the two rivers are comparatively close together; and called attention to the fact that if a camp were pitched on this spot, it would occupy a commanding position mid-way between Tadcaster and Adel. For a discussion on Pompocali and its probable locality, we would refer to a Paper by Principal Bodington, in the Miscellanea for 1892. Bardsey was next visited, where the vicar, the Rev. E. B. Braithwaite, described the varied interests of the Church. The members discussed the controversial questions connected with the building—the so-styled long and short work of the tower, the herring-bone masonry, the relative ages of the pointed arches of the south aisle, and the pillars with the square abacus on which they stand. The Parish Registers were shown, dating back as far as 1538, and amongst the early names that of William Congreve, who was baptised here on February 10th, 1668. The Castle Hill, behind the Vicarage, was also visited, on which is a Burh of unusual shape. The party then drove to Harewood, and after tea went to see the Castle and Church, under the guidance of Mr. W. H. Witherby. He pointed out that there had been a castle on this spot as early as the reign of King John, but the present building was the work of Sir William de Aldburgh, who came into possession of the manor in 1327, by marriage with the daughter of Lord de Lile of Rouge-mont. The Castle is an interesting specimen of the golden age of castle-building, the hall containing a beautiful decorated recess or side-board and presenting several unusual features. The chief interest in the Church, built in the debased Perpendicular style, centres in the six tombs, more especially in that of Sir William Gascoigne, the famous judge.

The Second Excursion was held on Saturday, July 29th, when the Society visited Leathley, Swinsty, and Otley. Mr. Canham, the rector, described the rude early tower, the old door with excellent iron scroll-work, and other noticeable features in Leathley Church; and the members drove up the Washburn valley, and alighted at Swinsty Hall, a charming specimen of a Tudor house. The mansion, which is of two dates, still preserves much of the 16th and 17th centuries woodwork, both in the wainscoting and in the roofwork, and has some old stained glass in the windows. On their return to Otley, the members visited All Saints' Church, and returned by train from Otley.

The members who formed the Third Excursion, on Saturday, September 9th, had the good fortune to explore Pontefract Castle, under the able guidance of Mr. Richard Holmes, who pointed out the commanding strength of the Castle, and described the fortress in detail. After passing the burying ground, the chapel, the king's tower, and the queen's, much interest was taken in the kitchen and the compartments identified as bakeries, butcheries, and the like. After tea the party drove through Ferrybridge to Birkin, where the Church was closely examined. Here there is a charming example of a perfectly-proportioned apse. The Church is entered by a south porch, with successive arches of peculiarly-beautiful moulding, distinguished respectively by the same mouldings as the head mouldings of the windows in the apse.

The Fourth Excursion, on 28th September, was to Kirkstall Abbey. The members owe this interesting Excursion to the courtesy of the Yorkshire Archæological Society, who had originally organized this visit; and are much indebted to Mr. Hope for his excellent account of the buildings and the foundations which have been lately unearthed. Mr. Micklethwaite explained the scheme in hand for the further preservation of the buildings, and made an excellent defence of the action taken by Mr. Hope and himself with regard to the destruction of the ivy and vegetation, introducing his now famous dilemma, "Will you have the ivy, or the Abbey?" Much of what Mr. Hope said is embodied in his Paper on Kirkstall Abbey, read before the Philosophical Society on October 17th, 1893. It is hoped that at an early date the Society will be able to print some account of the recent work and discoveries at the Abbey, embodying Mr. Hope's views as to the use of the various buildings, as far as they can be traced.

Chartæ Leodínenses;

WITH NOTES ON

THE REAME FAMILY

AND

THE LEEDS CHANTRIES OF THE B.V.M.

By THOMAS MARSHALL.

THE archæological value of Charters relating to the property of religious houses is known to every one from Dugdale's great work. But private charters, when of sufficient antiquity, are often of scarcely inferior interest and value from the light they throw on family history, from the details which they furnish of the ordinary transactions of life, and from the topographical information contained in them. Unfortunately private deeds, except in the case of a few great families, are rarely accessible to the antiquary. People not important enough to have a muniment room seldom preserve their title-deeds for any length of time. The evidences of sale and purchase or leases of land, marriage settlements, and so forth, are commonly left in the custody of solicitors or trustees for a generation or two and then they are lost sight of, or dispersed or cut up and used for waste paper or commercial purposes. A great deal of that kind of minute information which antiquaries value, and which it is the business of Archæological Societies to preserve, thus perishes—at what loss to our knowledge of the past no one can say. Possibly therefore, the following transcript of an old deed relating to some property in Leeds may prove interesting to the members of the Thoresby Society, as illustrating the kind of information which may be extracted from the lumber of a lawyer's office. The deed in question forms part of the title of the Saddle Inn, which formerly stood on the east side of Briggate where the viaduct of the North-Eastern Railway crosses the street. In the year 1867 I sold the Saddle Inn to the Railway Company, who, not caring to take up the earlier deeds, left them in my possession. I give an exact transcript of the deed; and have added a translation, for the benefit of those who may happen to be unfamiliar with the exceedingly bad Latin in which it is written; and this is followed by an explanation of the circumstances under which the deed came to be made, and by some Notes on the Leeds Chantries of the Blessed Virgin Mary and on the Reame family, suggested by references in the instrument to those subjects.

(Signed) THO: FFANSHAW Audit :

The arrangement and language of this lease does not substantially differ from that used by old-fashioned country conveyancers thirty years ago—so conservative is the law of its forms. It will be noticed however that there is no description given of the lessee Thomas Reame nor of his father Richard. I have called attention in the foot-notes to one or two words and parts of sentences as to the meaning of which I am not clear.

It will be observed that the lease is granted under the seal of the Duchy of Lancaster in the Court of the Duchy Chamber at Westminster and by the authority of the Commissioners of the Duchy—Sir John Fortescue, Chancellor and Under-Treasurer of the Exchequer ; Sir John Popham, Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench ; Edward Coke, Esquire, Attorney-General ; and Thomas Brograve, Esquire, Attorney-General of the Duchy. Sir John Fortescue, appointed Chancellor of the Exchequer in 1589, had the additional office of Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster conferred upon him in 1601, the year before the date of the lease. Sir John Popham became Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench in 1592 ; he is described in the deed as “Capitalis Justiciarius dictæ Dominæ Reginæ ad placita coram Domina Regina tenenda,” i.e., Chief Justice of the Pleas of the Crown, as distinguished from the Common Pleas, or pleas between subject and subject which were under the jurisdiction of another court. The title of the Chief Justice of the King's Court varied from time to time. He was anciently called "Justicarius Angliæ Capitalis" or "Justicia Prima," but later his title was "Justicarius Noster Capitalis ad placita coram nobis terminanda," and this is very nearly the designation given in the deed. Edward Coke was appointed Attorney-General in 1593. He was knighted subsequently to the date of this deed.

The history of the transaction appears to be this. In the reign of Elizabeth the whole or the greater part of Leeds was leasehold of the Duchy of Lancaster and belonged to the Crown in right of that Duchy. The practice was to grant leases for 21 years with a fine on renewal to persons wishing to occupy the Duchy lands. In the year 1585 Richard Reame of Briggate clothier (see Thoresby Society's publications, vol. i., at pp. 301 and 388) held a lease from the Crown for 21 years of a house in Briggate, probably the one in which he carried on his business with the aid of his family and apprentices, and which was situated on the east side of the street where the railway viaduct now is, and conveniently near to the bridge where the cloth market was held. As he required a field for tentering or other purposes he held also half an acre of land at Burmantofts. The burgage and field had been in the occupation of his family for some years, certainly before Edward the Sixth's time. This Richard Reame was buried in the Leeds Parish Church on Jan. 28th, 1590 (Thoresby Society's Publications: Leeds Parish Registers, Burials, p. 301). He left the following will (Thoresby Society's Publications: Leeds Parish Registers, Wills, p. 388). I transcribe the entry:—

"Richard Reame, th'elder, of Leedes, clothier. Dated 10 Jan., 1590-1; pr. 20 Apr., 1591. Body to be bur. in par. ch. of Leedes, near my father. To Jane, my wife, my messuage, &c., being three parts of one whole burgaige, with appurts., in Leedes, and half an acre of land in Burmantoftes, in my occ. for the years to come by lease by Her Majestie, under the great seale for life. Remainder to my son Christopher R. To said wife my close called the Holmes, and the close called Red Ynge, with appurts., near Leedes, in my occ. for term of years; remainder to son Christopher R., and to son Richard R., equally. Debts, &c. Residue to be divided into three parts: one for the performance of this will; one to my wife; and the third equally among my five children, Thomas R., Christopher R., Richard R., Sibell R., and Jane R. To daughter Sibell, £6 13s. 4d.; dau. Jane, £6 13s. 4d. Poor of Leeds, 3s. 4d. Two grand-daughters, Jane Lyster and Elizabeth Lyster, each 20s. Residue to Jane, my wife. Said Jane, my wife, and all my three sons, Thomas, Christopher, and Richard R., executors. Witnesses:—Richard Harysone, William Ellis, and Henry Kytchen, with others. (Bur. 28 Jan., 1590-1.)"

The above will evidently deals with the property which formed the subject of the lease recited in the deed above set out and dated the 15th Oct., 1585, although the property leased is wrongly described as being held under the great seal instead of under the seal of the Duchy of Lancaster. The testator demised his term of years to his wife Jane with remainder to his son Christopher. The lease expired in 1606. Before that date both Jane and Christopher had died. The former was buried on Oct. 6th, 1593; the latter on the 27th Jan., 1601 (Thoresby Soc. Pub.: Parish Church Burials, pp. 310 and 338.) On the death of Christopher the testator's interest in the lease passed under the residuary bequest to the executors of the will for the remainder of the term. Thomas (who appears to have been the eldest son) was probably carrying on his father's business, and therefore desired to have the lease in his own hands at once. He arranged with his co-executors for the value of the share in the lease belonging to the other members of the family, and thereupon surrendered the lease to the Crown four years before its expiration by effluxion of time; paid a fine of £13 10s. for the renewal; and took a fresh lease of the property to himself in 1602. This explains the statement in the recital in the deed that Thomas was already in possession and also the implication that he was not in possession under a strictly legal title. The real tenants were the executors, but they had allowed Thomas to enter into possession. We may infer that the object of the lease was to carry out a family arrangement by which Thomas the testator's eldest son was to become the tenant of the property immediately on the death of his brother Christopher for the purpose of enabling him more conveniently to carry on his father's business of a clothier in Briggate in his own premises.

The Reame family had been established in Briggate more than half a century at the date of the lease, and had held this particular property since some time prior to the reign of Edward VI. at least. In the Receiver's accounts of the annual rents of the lands belonging to the two Chantries of the Blessed Mary the Virgin in Leeds, contained in the Minister's accounts of the Duchy of Lancaster¹⁰ there is an account of Mr. Mallet, Receiver and Collector of the Leeds rents, for two years ending Michaelmas, 3 Edw. VI. Amongst the entries of the rents collected and received by him is a sum of "30s. from a burgage and half an acre of land in Burmantoftes" in the tenure of the wife of — Ryem at 15s. a year. The Chantries were dissolved in the first year of Edward VI., so these two years' rents were the first rents received by the Crown. The husband of Mrs. Reame must have been a tenant of the Chantry. The first Crown lease of the Chantry lands was in the 2nd of Edward VI. (See post.)

(10) I am indebted to Mr. Page, the editor of the Chantry Certificates for the Surtees Society, for this and for much other information.

The description of the property as having formerly been "parcel of the late Chantry of the Blessed Virgin Mary in the Church of Leeds" ("infra ecclesiam de Leedes") creates some difficulty. We only know of two Chantries dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary in the town or parish of Leeds, and the position of neither of them, so far as we know it from Thoresby, is consistent with the expression "infra Ecclesiam de Leedes." I propose to examine this part of the question under a separate heading.

Leeds Chantries, and especially Chantries of the Virgin Mary.

Thoresby in his Vicaria Leodiniensis (pp. 30 and 39) gives on the authority of "a curious (though mutilated) record, purchased by the late excellent Archbishop Sharp, and given by his grace to be deposited among the Records in the Tower of London," the following list of the Chantries in the town and parish of Leeds. It refers to the year 1515 or thereabouts :—

In this list there are two Chantries of the Blessed Virgin Mary (Nos. 3 and 4) but it will be observed that the endowments and outgoings are exactly the same. That two separate Chantries should have precisely the same amount and description of property is so incredible that one infers an error somewhere.

If we turn to the Ducatus Leodinenses, we find it expressly stated that "there were two Chantries dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, as appears by a lease of houses, late belonging thereto, 4th July, 2 Edward VI., made by that king after the dissolution of Chantries" (Ducat. Leod., 2nd Edition, p. 82, Note).

One of these two Chantries is stated by Thoresby (Vicaria, p. 33, Note) to be on Leeds Bridge. "The Chantry of St. Mary the Virgin was where is now the school at the Bridge as appears by a surrender (in Archivis Sti Petri Leod.), capella S^m Mariæ Virginis super pontem de Leedes."

See also Ducatus, p. 77, where, after mentioning the school at the north end of the Bridge where he was himself educated, Thoresby adds: "That this edifice was an ancient chapel before the Reformation, and that Sir John Clarke was Prieste thereof, and buried 9th December, 1565, is evident from the Register of the Parish Church; but whether it was a Chantry, or one of those Oratories that the piety of our ancestors frequently built near the ferries over rivers, I cannot yet learn." Whitaker, however, adds in a note: "It was a Chantry dedicated to St. Mary the Virgin, as appears by a deed dated 5th June, 1376, penes T. Wilson. About 1515 it had three burgages ten houses and cottages and lands called St. Mary Ings in Leeds. Robert Hopton was then Chantry Priest there." This would identify the chapel on the Bridge with No. 3 in the list given above.

The other Chantry of the Blessed Virgin Mary is by Thoresby supposed to have stood near to the North Bar. (Ducat. Leod., p. 82.) "Nigh unto this North Bar once stood a tenement or chapel called the New Chapel containing by estimation forty-four yards in length, and in breadth thirty-six yards, together with an orchard, a garden, a decayed cottage, with the appurtenances. . . . But who was the founder of it occurs not, except this was the Chantry of Our Lady, which, I confess, I am apt to believe it was, and that it was called the New Chapel rather than St. Mary's to distinguish it from another St. Mary's, of which before." This reason can hardly be accepted as a sufficient one for altering the name of a Chantry dedicated to a saint who held so conspicuous a position as St. Mary the Virgin. The piety of the day would probably have been offended by the change from St. Mary's Chapel to the New Chapel, and it would have required some stronger motive than the one assigned to justify the change to popular feeling. So far as Thoresby is concerned, the question is left in this way. There were two Chantries dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary: one of them was on the north side of Leeds Bridge; the site of the other is not certainly or even probably fixed.

It seems to me that the reference to the Chantry of the Blessed Virgin Mary in the deed above transcribed helps us to solve the difficulty. The burgage and half-acre of land in Burmantofts leased to Reame formed, beyond all doubt, part of the lands and tenements belonging to one of the two Chantries of the Blessed Virgin Mary in Leeds. Those lands are expressly mentioned in William Mallet's accounts of the rents of these Chantries as belonging to the wife of one of the Reames in Edward VI.'s time. The deed describes the Chantry as having been "in the Church of Leeds." The description contained in a lease may generally be relied on as being fairly accurate. It is at all events a better authority than the unsupported supposition of an antiquary.

We know then that one of the two Chantries stood on Leeds Bridge; the deed tells us that one was in the Church of Leeds. We may conclude then that the second of the Chantries was not the New Chapel but that it was a Lady Chapel in St. Peter's Church, with an endowment of its own.

It is difficult to make out the sources of the endowments of these two Chantries. Thoresby's authority, quoted above, "the curious though mutilated record purchased by the late excellent Archbishop Sharpe," has certainly fallen into a mistake in the description of the property out of which the rents issued. It says that each Chantry possessed three burgages three tenements seven cottages and a parcel of land called St. Mary Ings, producing a rent of £4 6s. 8d., and making the income of the two Chantries £8 13s. 4d. From the Minister's accounts among the Duchy of Lancaster Records it appears that for the two years ending Michaelmas in the third year of Edward VI. the rents of the lands and tenements pertaining to the two late Chantries of the Blessed Mary the Virgin in Leeds amounted to £14 8s. 8d., giving an annual rent of £7 4s. 4d. The receiver's account of the rents of the same Chantries in the 23rd and 24th Elizabeth amounted to the yearly sum of £7 10s. 10d. In 1515 which is the approximate date of the record and account cited by Thoresby, these rents are stated at £8 13s. 4d. It seems probable that although Thoresby's authority is wrong in his description of the property, he is right in the amount of the rental. In the Duchy of Lancaster Minister's accounts (Bundles 564, No. 8,945), preserved at the Public Office Records, the lands out of which the above-mentioned annual rental of £7 4s. 4d. in Edward VI.'s time issued are described. It will be sufficient here to say that these properties comprise a house and close called Mary Ynge, three burgages, six cottages and seven other properties being houses and messuages in Leeds and a farmhouse at Stapley. These particulars must be accepted as correct; as has been mentioned already the Leeds burgage and half-acre of land leased to the Reames is expressly mentioned among them.

I am indebted to Mr. Page for the following account of the history of the two Chantries in question. Some time previously to 1398 several persons granted various parcels of land in Leeds and Hunslet (including three shillings rent from a meadow in Hunslet, called St. Mary Enges given by William de la Hay) for sustaining divers services in the Church of Leeds, without having obtained the necessary licence for granting lands in mortmain. Whereupon these lands escheated to John of Gaunt as Duke of Lancaster, and in 1410 Henry IV. granted them to Walter Croce Chaplain and his successors to celebrate divine service in the Church of Leeds for the soul of the same king and his progenitors Dukes of Lancaster. (See Patent Roll, 11th Henry IV., p. 2, m. 12.) In the certificate prior to the dissolution of the Chantries (see Augmentation Office Chantry Certificates, No. 69, No. 5), these Chantries are described as "the two Chaunteries of Our Lady in the Parish Church of Ledes." This last description creates a fresh difficulty: for on the one hand we can scarcely doubt that one of the Chantries was situated on Leeds Bridge, and on the other hand we can hardly understand how a Chantry on Leeds Bridge can be said to be in the Parish Church. The two Chantries are said to have been founded by the parishioners of Leeds, and the incumbents performed their services according to an ordinance dated 25th July, 15 Henry VII. (See Augmentation Office Chantry Certificates, No. 69, No. 5.) When and how the revenues of these two Chantries became amalgamated, as they appear from the receiver's accounts 3 Edward VI. to have been, I have seen nothing to show; but this amalgamation of the rents was possibly for the purpose of supporting a single priest to perform the services in the Parish Church, rents proving insufficient to support both a service in the church and one in the chapel on the Bridge; or the chapel on the Bridge having fallen out of repair and rents being insufficient to repair it, and this is the reason that both Chantries came to be described in the Augmentation Office Records as "Chaunteries in the Paryssh Church of Ledes," the exact locality being of no great importance for the purpose of the accounts.

From the Chantry Certificates now in course of being edited by Mr. Page, and from the other sources of information above indicated, I conclude that at the date of the dissolution of the Chantries in 1547¹¹ there were six Chantries in the parish of Leeds, viz. :—

- (1) The Chantry of the Blessed Virgin Mary at the north-west end of Leeds Bridge.

(11) 1 Edw. VI., c. 14.—The Act devotes the revenues of the colleges, chantries, and free chapels given to the King to the maintenance of grammar schools, the improvement of vicarages, and the support of preachers, but the greater part was applied to the payment of the King's debts and in grants to the members of the Government.

- (2) The Chantry of the Blessed Virgin Mary in the Parish Church.

The revenues of these two Chantries, derived from lands and tenements in Leeds, were amalgamated sometime in the earlier part of the 16th century. The Chantries themselves were founded by the parishioners, and the services were performed under an ordinance of 15 Hen. VII.

- (3) The Chantry of Mary Magdalene, in the Parish Church, founded by William Evers in 1524, and supported by rents from lands and tenements in Leeds and Cawood.

- (4) The Chantry of St. Catherine, in the Parish Church, founded by Thos. Clarell in 1489. Supported by a rent payable by Sir Arthur Darcy from lands late of the Trinities in York.

Note on a Roman Altar

PRESERVED IN THE MUSEUM OF THE LEEDS PHILOSOPHICAL AND LITERARY SOCIETY.

THE Altar in question, which was dredged up near Castleford in 1890 by the Aire and Calder Navigation Company, and by them kindly presented to the Leeds Literary and Philosophical Society, has been described by Mr. Haverfield in the Archæol. Journal, vol. 49.

The chief interest of the inscription arises from the occurrence in it of the name BRIGANT. Five other inscriptions purport to have been found in which this name occurs. Of these, one discovered near Slack is dedicated DEO BERGANTI; the remaining four are dedicated to a female divinity. Of these one, found near Birrens, in Scotland, and now preserved in the Edinburgh Museum, is dedicated to a goddess Brigantia (Brigantiae sacrum), and bears a representation of the goddess. A second, which professes to have been discovered near the Roman wall beyond the river Irthing, was dedicated to DEÆ NYMPHÆ BRIG. It is now lost, and from the time of Horsley grave doubts have been entertained as to its authenticity. The remaining inscriptions of this class have all been discovered in Yorkshire. One was found and is still to be seen at Adel. The only words decipherable are DEÆ BRIGAN. Another was found at Greetland in the year 1597, near Slack. The inscription runs: D. VICT. BRIG. et NUM. AG. T. AUR. AURELIAN. D. D. PRO SE ET SUIS. It dates from the year A.D. 205. As Mr. Haverfield remarks, the word BRIG or BRIGANT may stand either for BRIGANTUM or BRIGANTIÆ, and we are unable, therefore, to say whether the inscriptions in which this abbreviation occurs are to the goddess Brigantia or to the Victory Goddess for successes (a) over the Brigantes or (b) gained by the Brigantes. That the tribe of the Brigantes had a tribal goddess of their own name is established, not merely by the evidence of the Birrens inscription, but on other testimony. There were Brigantes not only in the north of England, but also in Ireland; and it is possible that both the English and the Irish tribe were immigrants from the Cottian Alps, where there was a town Brigantium, the name of which still survives in Briançon (Guest's Orig. Celt, ii., pp. 14, 15). The Irish Brigantes worshipped a goddess Brigit, who was regarded as patroness of fire, and also of poetry and medicine. It is said that the St. Bridget of Christian hagiology subsequently benefited by a confusion of thought which credited her with the endowments possessed by the pagan goddess of similar name (Elton's Origin of English History, p. 270). We are, perhaps, not going too far in supposing that the Brigantia of the English inscription is identical with the Brigit of Ireland. It is likely enough that the series of inscriptions to which reference has been made were set up by natives serving in the Roman armies, in thanksgiving for victories in which they had borne a share over the wilder peoples of the north.

A PAPER COMMUNICATED TO THE THORESBY SOCIETY

BY THE REV. W. KERR SMITH

(Hon. Member of the Kernowar's Club).

IT is obvious that in a short Paper on a long subject it will only be possible to indicate in the barest outline the characteristic features of the periods with which I propose to deal. Still, I hope to be able to lay down some broad general marks of distinction which will assign approximate dates to monuments, brasses, or pieces of armour.

The subject may, for convenience, be first divided roughly into two main periods, and the leading features of each be afterwards considered. These periods are—

I.—THAT OF “MAIL.”

II.—THAT OF “PLATE.”

We may take it generally that there was no plate armour worn in England from the Conquest to the commencement of the reign of Edward III.—that is to say, from the eleventh to the fourteenth century. And we may also take it as generally correct that there was no mail armour worn in this country from the fourteenth to the seventeenth. This rough and ready division is quite sufficiently correct for practical purposes. During the reign of the Edwards, mail almost entirely, and with wonderful celerity, disappears. It lingers awhile in the form of gussets, to cover joints in the plate armour, as, for instance, over the neck and shoulders, in the armpits and elbow-joints, and on the thighs. But not for long. The camaille, or covering for the neck, is soon replaced by the gorget; the armpits are protected by rondels, or pallettes; the elbow-joints, by enlarged guards of plate; and the thighs by tassets and tuilles. From the time of the Wars of the Roses, in the reign of Henry VI., and onward, the English knight was entirely encased in plate.

I have not very much to say about the first period—the period of mail. For the sake of convenience, we may sub-divide it into two shorter periods—

1. From William I. to end of reign of King Henry II.—
1066–1189.
2. From commencement of Richard I. to commencement of Edward III.—1189–1327.

Or, approximately—

1. The eleventh and twelfth centuries.
2. The thirteenth century.

Or yet, once more, in order to associate the changes in style with memorable historical incidents, we may put it that the first period extended from the Conquest to the active participation of the English in the Crusades; and the second, from the date of the third Crusade (that in which Richard took part) to the time of the full development of that elaborate system of Chivalry which had its fruit in the gorgeous military displays—the jousts and tournaments of the reign of Edward III. and Richard II. I have included both these sub-periods under the general description “the period of mail.” I used the word mail in a comprehensive sense. In the first of these periods, I very much doubt whether chain mail, composed of small circular steel rings, interlaced, was worn in this country. The defensive armour of the body appears to have consisted of a leather coat, covering the trunk, the arms to the wrists, and the legs to the knees, to which were sown, in rows, overlapping rings, small round plates, or scales. The helmets appear to have been small in size, conical in shape, and sometimes with a protruding nose-piece, for the protection of the face. In this period, the mail (if I may so call it) does not appear to have been carried over the head, the hands, or the feet. There is no visor to the helmet; shields are of immense size; and the swords are of the simplest construction. The warriors represented on the Bayeux tapestry are all of them thus clad.

Perhaps this is the best place for me to say that the usual form of the sword, until the time of Philip and Mary—i.e., the middle of the sixteenth century—was that of a simple cross. The blades are broad, two-edged, and about three feet six inches long; the pommel, or knob, at the top of the grip, is large, flat, and generally circular in form; the quillons, or guard for the hand, are perfectly plain, sometimes quite straight, sometimes they have a slight curve downwards.

Whether there is any direct connection between the Crusades and the introduction of chain mail, or mail proper, is a disputed point. It is, at any rate, a singular coincidence that the evidences of its adoption by English knights commence with the reign of Richard.

Its greater flexibility enabled the warrior to envelop his body in it from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot.

In handling a coat of mail, the first thing that strikes one is its enormous weight; and it is not difficult to imagine the inconvenience to the wearer on a hot summer's day, or in Oriental countries. It is almost invariably found in the pictures, brasses, effigies, &c., of this period, that a sleeveless linen surcoat is worn over the mail (1).¹ This was to protect the wearer to some extent from the sun's heat.

The conical helmet has by this time gone out of fashion. A steel, or possibly leather, skull-cap is worn on the top of the head, and the mail drawn over it, covering the neck and ears, and only leaving an opening for the face. Over this again was worn a huge helmet of leather, strengthened with bars, which usually, in front, assume a graceful, ornamental shape. A horizontal slit enabled the wearer to see his foe; and the lower part was perforated, to enable him to breathe freely. This heaume would only be worn in conflict. The knight would at other times carry it suspended from his saddle; and it was frequently attached to his waistbelt, by a long strap or chain—as shown in our illustration (1)—so that he could easily recover it if it were knocked off.

You will notice, by the way, that these helmets have no visors or beavers. They were clapped bodily on over the mail coif, and rested on the shoulders, to which, I suppose, they would be fastened by a strap. The favourite shapes were what are now known as the "barrel" and the "saucepan."

Other features that I shall ask you to note are the aillettes (1), or leather wings (usually decorated with the wearer's coat-of-arms), worn to protect the shoulders from downward cuts of the sword, and the leather knee-guards, or genouillieres.

This leather was prepared and made tough by some method of boiling, and was known as cuir-bouilli.

The fourteenth century saw a complete change in the style of defensive armour. At its commencement the warrior is clad in complete mail; at its close he is encased in plate. This was due to several causes. In the first place, war was reduced to a science: elaborate siege operations necessitated some sort of change. The rise, or rather the development, of Chivalry, with its pomp of tournament, and love of military display, the enormous advance which was made in the armourer's art, and the influence of the new school of design, which had its birth in Italy, all contributed to that elaboration of the knightly equipment to which the effigies and brasses of the period bear such graceful testimony.

By the way, as I have just spoken of the tournament as one of the fruits of the development of Chivalry in the fourteenth century, it may be of interest to note, in passing, that most beautiful anachronism of Sir Walter Scott, in his Ivanhoe—the gathering of knights and nobles, under the auspices of Prince John, at Ashby-de-la-Zouche. It conveys, I believe, a very accurate, and certainly is a splendidly picturesque, description of what must frequently have occurred in the reigns of Edward III. and Richard II.—that is to say, about a century and a half later than the time in which it is supposed to have taken place. In the reign of Richard I. it is, of course (as there described), an impossibility.

Plate armour seems to have come into use in England about the beginning of the reign of Edward III. I shall not have time to note minor marks of transition; but shall, on the present occasion, as we are taking a more comprehensive survey, content myself with pointing out the chief sub-periods into which we may conveniently divide the latter part of our subject.

All such divisions must, of course, be arbitrary. The changes that were made from time to time in the fashion of armour were introduced gradually, and the periods dovetail into one another in a way that makes it very difficult to assign actual dates for their commencement and cessation. But I think the following divisions are fairly accurate:—

- I.—The period of the Wars with France: from the beginning of Edward III. to the end of Henry V.—1327–1420.
- II.—A short transition period: the first twenty years of Henry VI.—1420–1440.
- III.—The period of the Wars of the Roses, during the latter part of Henry VI., and the reigns of Edward IV. and V. and Richard III.—1440–1485.

IV.—The early Tudor period: Henry VII. and VIII.—1485–1550.

V.—The later Tudor period: Mary and Elizabeth—1550–1600.

VI.—The Stuarts and Commonwealth—1600 and onwards.

I.—The first period, then, is that of the War with France under Edward III., Richard II., and Henry V.—the period of Crecy and Agincourt (2). During the whole of this period the characteristic defence for the head was the bascinet. It is of singularly graceful form, and is the basis, so to speak, of all future developments. It was during the first part of this period worn without visor or beaver, and was often encircled by a floreated or jewelled wreath of precious metal (3). The neck and shoulders were protected by the camaille, which was laced to the bascinet by a series of loops provided for that purpose. The body was defended by breast and back plates of steel, and the legs and arms by coverings of steel or of boiled leather (6). Gussets of mail protected the armpits, and a short skirt of mail attached to the lower rim of the breastplate defended the thighs. Over the breastplate and mail skirt was drawn a closely fitting short garment of silk, or of some rich stuff, embroidered with the wearer's coat-of-arms, and encircled about the loins with a richly jewelled belt (2). The sollarettes or shoes were of steel, beautifully wrought in a series of laminated plates, which yielded to every movement of the foot (6). The gloves or gauntlets appear to have been made of leather, and the knuckles and back of the finger-joints defended by spikes, something after the style of the modern knuckle duster (3). These knuckle defences sometimes assumed fancy shapes; on the gauntlets of the Black Prince at Canterbury, for instance, they are of gold, and are shaped like leopards couchant. They were called gadlyngs. For tournament purposes a huge heaume or helm of splendid heraldic design was worn in the place of (some say over the top of) the bascinet, and was surmounted by the wearer's crest.

I may perhaps just mention the collar of S.S. so often seen on brasses or monumental effigies of the early fifteenth century. It is supposed to be a decoration bestowed by Henry IV. on those who favoured him in his revolt against Richard II. (3).

II.—The next period was a very short one, and is of a transitional character. I should hardly have noticed it had it not strongly marked characteristics. I don't think it lasted more than about twenty or twenty-five years, but it is illustrated by a number of very fine examples.

These differ from those of the preceding period only in the substitution of plate defences where mail had still been retained.

The camaille is now abolished, and its place supplied by a gorget of steel. The bascinet seems to have taken a visor,—though this latter is invariably absent on brasses, so that the face may be fully exposed.

The armpits are defended now by pallettes, sometimes of steel, sometimes of boiled leather; and the mail skirt disappears, to make way for a skirt of narrow plates, laminated like the sollarettes.

A very good example of this period will be seen in a brass in Merevale Church, Warwickshire, erected in 1426 to Lord Ferrers.

III.—The next period, that of the Wars of the Roses, is possibly the finest period of all. It lasted from about 1440 (the middle of the reign of Henry VI.) to 1485 (the end of the reign of Richard III.)—possibly a little later, but the battle of Bosworth Field is a very convenient date to remember, and it is sufficiently correct for practical purposes.

The illustration (4) is from a brass in Sprotborough Church, in this county, erected to a Lord Fitzwilliam in 1474, and is remarkably characteristic.

The chief features of this period are the salade form of helmet (7), broad pauldrons, or shoulder guards, enlarged defences of fan-like shape, for the elbow and knee joints; and a shorter laminated skirt, from which were suspended what were known as tuilles (the earliest form of the tasset), for the defence of the thighs. The breast-plate is often made of two, sometimes of three or four pieces laminated, so as to allow for the bending of the body.

IV.—The early Tudor period comprised the reigns of Henry VII. and VIII. The German influence is strongly marked, though eccentricity in fashion was not carried to such an extent in England as it was under the Maximilian regime abroad.

Its principal feature is the armet, or perfect form of close helmet, which replaced the salade of the latter part of the previous century (8 and 9). The lines on which these helmets are constructed are particularly fine, and follow those of the human head. The projecting ridge, which now appears for the first time, is ordinarily low and flat, and the crown of the head is strengthened by overlapping plates. The breast-plate is usually globose, and often fluted (10). The tuille disappears, and with it the short laminated skirt ; in place of both appear what may perhaps be described as the tasset proper, which was considerably broader than the tuille, as well as longer, and is suspended directly from the lower rim of the breastplate (10). It must have been very much more convenient to the knight, when on horseback, than either of the thigh defences of the two preceding periods. The sollarettes are made very broad at the toes. Pallettes reappear as defences for the armpits ; and the elbow and knee defences are reduced to more business-like dimensions.

That which claims especial notice in this period is the helmet—note especially our example from Beverley (9), which is a particularly fine one. The visor and beaver (if I may venture to anticipate a little—I know it is an anachronism to speak of a beaver before the time of Elizabeth) are, as it were, made in one piece. The ocularium or eye-slit is undivided. The mentonniere, or covering for the chin, usually opens in front, on the chin itself, and swings on hinges at the side over the ears.

V.—From this time and onward the armourer's art commenced to deteriorate. Firearms were beginning to come into general use, and military interest consequently increasingly tended to centre in these new weapons. Some very splendid armour was still produced during the reigns of Mary and Elizabeth, but it had lost its fine form, though much skill was still displayed in the elaboration of ornamental detail (5). The chasing on some of the helmets, morions, and breast and back-plates of this period is very rich, and wrought with great care and finish.

The characteristic features of this period (Mary and Elizabeth) are "peascod" breastplates, broad tassets (made in one piece), large pauldrons (without rondels), solarettes shaped more to the foot. The helmets are in four pieces—the body of the casque, the visor, the beaver, and the mentonniere (chin piece). The morion, or cabaset (11), is largely worn. And the simpler form of sword, with plain quillions, gives way to the more graceful rapier, or the English broadsword, with circular hand-guard. I would especially venture to call attention to our illustration (12), which represents one of the finest, if not the finest, of swords in England.

This is the period of fine swords. There is an interesting reference in Meyrick's book on armour to a controversial work of the period, in which the author essays to prove the immense superiority of the old type of English broadsword over the new-fangled rapier (13), which had been lately introduced by Philip and his courtiers from Spain. It is entitled :—

“PARADOXES OF DEFENCE, whence is proved the true grounds of “fight to be in the short ancient weapons, and that the short sword “hath advantage of the long sword or long rapier, and the weakness
“or imperfection of rapier fights displayed ; together with an admonition
“to the noble, ancient, valiant, and most brave nation of Englishmen, “to beware of false teachers of defence, and how they forsake their “own natural fights ; with a brief commendation of the noble science “or exercising of arms. By George Silver, gentleman. London, 1599.
“Dedicated to the Earl of Essex.”

The commencement of the seventeenth century brings us to the period of “lobster” suits and top boots. The tassets are lengthened, until at last they reach as low as the knee, and are made with the genouillieres attached. The helmets are much less graceful than in the preceding period, and so the way is paved for the final downfall of the art in the days of the Commonwealth.

The same Richard le Wayte appeals Roger de Northalle de Ledes for having sent out the said Robert, brother of Roger son of Roger de Ledes, and having received the same Robert in his manor of Leeds, having knowledge of the said felony that the said Robert &c., and as soon as he had accomplished the said sending and receiving back, he fled, &c.

The same Richard appeals Roger, son of Roger de Northalle de Ledes, for having sent out the said Robert, brother of Roger son of Roger de Ledes, and having received the same Robert in his house at Armeleye, having knowledge, &c.

And the said Robert, brother of Roger, Thomas, brother of Roger, Robert Formalt, Richard, brother of Roger, and Robert Rande came, brought by the Marshal, and say that there was no need to answer Richard le Wayte as to this writ of appeal, for they say that the same William le Wayte has a certain legitimate brother, Thomas by name, to whom the action should appertain in a case of an appeal of this kind, as first heir

And the said Richard le Wayte says that the said Thomas, whom the said Robert and others declare to be brother and first heir of the same William, was born out of matrimony, and demands that inquiry be made, &c. And the said Robert and others do the like. So it is commanded that there come for that purpose a jury before the king, in the octave of the Purification of the Blessed Mary, wheresoever the king may be, &c., and the said Robert and others in the meantime are committed to the Marshal, &c. After that therē came John Travers and Alexander de Ledes, William de Scargill, John de Calverlaye, Robert de Scargill, and William the Forester, all of the county of York, and took in custody the said Roger de Northalle and Roger his son, under appeal concerning the sending and reception, to present them before the king at the said term, pledging bodies for bodies, &c.

After that, at the said octave of the Purification, came the said Robert, &c., brought by the Marshal, and by the said mainprise, &c.

And Richard le Wayte failed to appear, and he was the appellor, therefore must he and his pledges for this prosecution be in mercy,¹² &c. And for certain reasons touching this business the said Robert, brother of Roger, and all the rest who were summoned are dismissed, by bail of Thomas Mohaud de Ridelesden, Ralph

They declare on oath that on Sunday, in the festival of Saint John the Baptist, there was a dispute between William, son of William le Wayte de Ledes, and Robert, son of Roger de Ledes, Knt., at a certain game played in the town of Ledes, about midday; this dispute was settled peacefully by the means of neighbours standing by, and they went into church carrying their swords and bucklers. After vespers had been sung William le Wayte came out of church,

 John de Manstoñ, going homewards, but John de Manstoñ lingered near the church-stile, and waited for the arrival of the said Robert from church, and William le Wayte and Thomas his
 Whytheued looking for the arrival of Robert. When the said Robert came out of church he went towards his home, and several men followed and exhorted him not to make a dispute out of reverence for the day, to which he answered that he would not, except in spite of his teeth,¹⁶ and that in self-defence. And when he came to the gate of the churchyard he found the said John de Manston standing there, and John said, 'Robert,
 I wish you no evil or insult,' and
 Robert likewise, 'Neither do I you.'
 On this he went off home, and when he was half way between the church and the house of the said Jordan, John de Manston cried out at the top of his voice against William and Thomas,
 'Come, see this man, who from day to day seeks to slay us and you.' Hearing this, William and Thomas came running with their swords drawn. And the said Robert seeing this, fled back towards the church. And when he came to the door of the churchyard he found it shut by the clergy and laymen, for fear that the church might be put under an interdict, so that Robert could not enter; and Robert seeing that he could not fly anywhere else, put his back against the wall of the churchyard. William coming on him, struck with his sword before Robert moved on his part, who received the blows on his buckler; and then Robert

(16) "Nisi inuitis dentibus" = except in spite of his settled resolution. This phrase may be derived from the story of the Bristol Jew (recorded later in Chronicles of Holinshed, 1577), who suffered a tooth to be drawn daily for seven days before he would submit to the extortion of King John. Cf. Rules of Civility (London, c. 1670), quoted in Blackwood, May, 1894: "'Tis a pleasant spectacle to see a person so handled retreating from one place to another, and the other, insensible of his rudeness, forcing him at last to cry Quarter in spite of his Teeth."

struck William back with his sword, and dealt him a blow on his right arm, under the living brawn,¹⁷ from which he died on the same day. John de Manston, Thomas Nesant, and Robert le Wayte, chaplain, brother of William, hustled the said Robert between the cemetery and the ditch of the said church, and gave him several blows on the head and body, till they left him lying as though dead, and saying no word to the chaplain or any man. They say further that after Thomas and Richard, brothers of Robert, came and found Robert so lying, speechless, and moving no limb, they carried him to a certain house in the manor of Roger de Ledes, his father, without the knowledge and against the will of the same. Wherefore Roger was for forbidding entry of his house and all his property to Thomas and Richard, under pain of loss of life and limb. At the view of the corpse of the said William, the said Roger before the townships and country¹⁸ admitted that he had the body of the said Robert within his houses, carried thither against his will by Thomas and Richard, as being in danger of death, for which body indeed he offered to answer to the lord king, when he should be able to be brought to life or be cured. And they say that he was not received into the house of the said Roger, his father, with felonious intent, but as a prisoner arrested by a bailiff of the lord king. View made,¹⁹ . . . confessed, and buried by G. de Thornewton. The goods of the said Robert: One sword, price xijd.; one buckler, price vid.; for which the township of Ledes is answerable.

This indictment having been examined at the suit of the lord king, the said Robert, Thomas, Robert Formalt, Richard, Robert Raude, according to the form of appeal above written were severally asked in what manner they would acquit themselves concerning the death of the said William.

Thomas, Robert Formalt, Roger, and Roger deny all violence, felony, and whatsoever is contrary to the peace of the king, etc., and because they are in no way blameworthy for the said death for good and evil place themselves on the country.²⁰

And Robert, and Richard son of Roger de Northalle, and Robert Rande say that they are clerics, and cannot answer without their ordinaries, etc., and in order that it may be known in what character these are to be delivered to their ordinary, let the truth of this matter be inquired of the country.²¹ Let jurors come, therefore, before the king in the octave of Saint John the Baptist, &c. And the said defendants are committed in the meantime to the charge of the Marshal. And on this matter came John de Kirketon, Richard de Barkeston, Henry de Bayledoñ, John de Kirkeby, Roger de Shirburñ, Nicholas tempeste, John Ithum, John de Alnathby, John de Coule, of county York; Thomas de Assheburñ, of county Derby; John Bernard, of the county of Kent; Wm. de Coventry, of county Warwick, and took charge of the said Roger de Northalle and Roger his son, as bail.

(20) Sc. : Submit to a verdict of their neighbours. The trial by a sworn body of neighbours, originally used for decision of preliminary questions. This privilege was obtained from the king, and the questions decided by inquest became eventually equivalent to the general issue.

(21) A verdict is to be taken as to their guilt, though, being clerks in orders, they cannot be sentenced by a lay court.

Robert shall find you twelve worthy and law-abiding men, to hold him against our order in case any one shall wish to say anything relating to the matter against him, you may deliver him to the twelve said men, etc.

“Witness: Aymer de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, our kinsman, at Westminster.

“July x., year of our reign xiv.”

By reason of which writ the said Robert, son of Roger, is dismissed, under charge of Roger de Ledes, Roger son of the same Roger, John de Kirke-ton, Hugh de Aberford, John Ithum, Richard son of Roger de Ledes, Roger de Shirburn, William de Aberford, Nicholas tempest, Robert Raude, Thomas son of Roger de Ledes of county York, and Simon de Knyghwyk, of county Northampton, to be brought forward on the octave of Saint Martin, etc., and so on from day to day.

Afterwards, on that day, came Robert, under custody aforesaid, and produces letters-patent of the lord king concerning pardon with regard to the death of the said William, in the following words:—

“Edward, etc., to all bailiffs, and his faithful subjects, etc., Because we have heard, etc., we, moved by pity, have pardoned the same Robert, etc., and concede him our peace securely on such terms, however, that he stand according to order in our court, in the case that any one shall wish to say aught against him in the matter. In witness of which thing we have caused these letters-patent to be made. Witness myself, at Westminster, Nov. xx., year of our reign xiv.”

He produces also a brief of the lord king to the justices, that they should cause Robert to be liberated without delay from the prison of the Marshalsea of the king in which he is detained, supposing that for that matter and for no other he is detained in the same. And on this a solemn proclamation is made to inquire if there be any one who wishes to accuse him concerning the said death. And there is no one who wishes . . . Therefore the same Robert, son of Roger, is acquitted in the matter, and let him have a writ for proclaiming his peace.²⁵

After that came the said Richard le Wayte and made a fine with the king, as is recorded in the Roll of Fines of the term of St. Michael, in the fifteenth year of our king now reigning. Therefore let him have a writ of supersedeas.²⁶

“Ebor.—Richard le Wayte made a fine with the lord king, in that he had not prosecuted his appeal that he made against Roger, son of Roger de Northalle de Ledes, and others, contained in the king's original writ²⁷ concerning the death of William le Wayte, his brother, as, &c., he did begin the appeal. And he is admitted²⁸ on fine of half a mark,²⁹ by surety of Richard de Ledes, of the same county. Therefore, let him have a writ of supersedeas.”

(25) That is, he is once more in the king's peace.

(26) Richard, though he had bound himself to prosecute the murderers of his brother, did not proceed with the case. Therefore he requires, and has to pay for, a writ of supersedeas, which will set aside all proceedings in his abortive prosecution.

(27) The writ which begins an action is an “original writ.”

ON THE

Early History of Arthington.

BEFORE the Norman Conquest Arthington was in the hands of a Northumbrian named Aluuard, who possessed in this neighbourhood an estate "in a ring fence," consisting of the manors of Arthington, Adel, Cookridge, Burdon, and Eccup. The following is the Domesday entry relating to the first of these villis:—

"LAND OF THE COUNT OF MORTAIN.

"In Hardinctone Aluuard had a manor of three carucates and two-and-a-half bovates geldable, where now may be three ploughs. Richard has it from the Count. There is one villein with two ploughing oxen, and two acres of meadow. Wood pasture two quarentens long and two wide. The whole manor one league long and four quarentens wide. In the time of King Edward worth thirty shillings, now five shillings."

The other four villis above named, which had been worth in King Edward's time sixty shillings, were all returned in Domesday as "waste," no inhabitants being mentioned. If the accuracy of the Domesday jurors as to the values twenty years previously is to be relied on, the district to the north and north-west of Leeds had thus evidently suffered severely from the results of the Conquest. The returns of other villis in the neighbourhood afford confirmation of this. In Weardley, Gospatric had five carucates of land, in the time of King Edward held by two Englishmen called Ligulf and Saxulf, and then worth twenty-five shillings, but now waste and unpopulated. Ulchil, the proprietor of Bramhope before the Conquest, was still allowed to hold that manor as a vassal of Gilbert Tison, but the value, which had been forty shillings, had disappeared,—here also the return is "waste." Otley, with its numerous berewicks, including Pool and Guiseley, the property of the Archbishop, had decreased from ten pounds to three pounds, and it is added, "maxima pars hujus manerii wasta est." Headingley and Allerton had each been worth forty shillings: the value of the former had sunk to four shillings,¹ the latter was "waste."

The Count of Mortain, tenant-in-chief of Arthington, was half-brother of William the Conqueror, and the person who, next to the King, obtained the greatest share of the splendid prize which the battle of Hastings had placed in the hands of the Normans. No less than 797 manors, of which 196 were in Yorkshire, were granted to him. Of the Yorkshire manors, a large proportion had been subinfeudated by the Count to Richard de Sourdeval, a Norman supposed to have come from Sourdeval in the department of La Manche, not far from the ancient castle of Mortain: and the grants to him included Aluuard's lands of Arthington, Burdon, Eccup, Adel, and Cookridge. Richard's daughter and heiress, or more probably co-heiress, Matilda, married Ralph Paynel, founder of Holy Trinity Priory, York, sheriff of the county, and possessor of the manor of Leeds, by grant from the Lacies. Ralph was himself a tenant-in-chief in Yorkshire, and his own estates descended to his eldest son, William Paynel: but the estates of his wife Matilda, derived from her father Richard de Sourdeval, appear to have descended successively to two younger sons, Jordan Paynel, who died without issue, and Alexander Paynel. It would therefore appear probable that Matilda was the second wife of Ralph Paynel, and that his eldest son William was the issue of a former marriage. The immense estates of the Count of Mortain were forfeited by his son in the reign of Henry I., and the younger Paynels afterwards became holders of Arthington, Cookridge, and the other vills, direct from the Crown, as tenants-in-chief.

At the time of Domesday, Adel Church had not been built, but it was probably then already in contemplation, as it is included in a grant by Ralph Paynel to Trinity Priory, York, made in the reign of William II.² The same grant conveys to the Priory, in addition to the Church, "a carucate of land and the tithes of Ardintona, and of all the vills which belong to it, and of the demesne." This grant was confirmed by Henry I. before 1108, and there is also extant a charter of confirmation by Alexander Paynel, the youngest son of Ralph Paynel.

(1) Whitaker (Loidis and Elmete, p. 116) says the value of Headingley at Domesday was four pounds—a mistake for four shillings. From this error he draws the equally erroneous conclusion that the manor had in some way escaped the general devastation, and doubled in value. There is the same mistake in Wilson's MS. copy of Domesday, in the Leeds Library.

(2) The present church was not built until the succeeding century.

This Alexander, lord of Arthington, Adel, and Cookridge, in succession to his brother Jordan Paynel, died about the end of Stephen's reign or the beginning of that of Henry II., and was succeeded by his son, William Paynel, then a very young man. William had his chief seat in Yorkshire at Hooton Paynell or Pagnell, but Cookridge was an important demesne of his, representing with its soke half a knight's fee in 1166. Probably about the time when he succeeded to his estates, the Cistercian monks, who had originally gone from Fountains to establish a house of their order at Barnoldswick, removed to their new habitation at Kirkstall, on the land of William Peytfin: and it was not long before their astute and energetic chief, Alexander, established a strong influence over William Paynel, as over other landowners in the district. There is an important charter of this William, made in 1162, "at the wapentake at Horsford," copied in the eighth volume of Dodsworth's MSS., fo. 81^d. By it, he confirms to Kirkstall Abbey half a carucate of land in Cookridge, which Adam, son of Hucce,¹ held, with rights of pasture, and other privileges: and he specially warrants this land to the monks "against Roger Musteile and his mother"—showing that the Mustels must already for some time have had claims in the vill of Cookridge. They do not appear among the vassals of William Paynel in the return of knights' fees made by him in 1166, copied in the black book of the Exchequer: it is certain, however, that they subsequently held both Arthington and Adel of the Paynels by military service: and by a charter made about this period, Roger Mustel conveyed to the monks of Kirkstall, Cookridge, with his men there and their houses, in pure alms, for the health of his soul, and in consideration of the aid which the monks had rendered him in acquitting to him his land, Adel to wit, and its soke, against his lord William Paynel, of the pledge in which he (William) had held it:² and William by another charter confirmed the grant of Cookridge, namely three carucates, and undertook to acquit the monks of all foreign service due in respect thereof, whether of county, riding, or wapentake. William Mustel, Roger's son, by another deed, a translation of which is printed in the Monasticon, confirmed his father's grant, and on his own account added "all Adel and all the soke of Adel," reserving a rent of three marks yearly.

(1) The service and homage of Adam were also included in this grant. He may have been the same person as Adam de Cookridge, who occurs in one or two charters about this period. Richard de Cookridge occurs a generation later.

(2) Dodsworth's MSS., viii., 80^d.

The rapid progress which the rising house of Kirkstall made in its acquisitions in the parish of Adel, brought it into collision with the older establishment of Trinity Priory, York, to which, as before stated, Ralph Paynel had given the advowson of the Church of Adel, and a carucate of land there. Notwithstanding his hereditary connection with the Priory, William Paynel seems to have leaned to the side of the Kirkstall monks: there is in the Monasticon a translation of a singular charter by him, granting to them the land which had been given by the villeins of Adel to the Church of that vill, and affirming that he had not warranted the donation to the Church by his villeins. He probably considered that in this donation his rights had been in some way trenched upon. A dispute likewise arose between the two houses respecting the advowson of the Church, to which the monks of Kirkstall, in spite of Ralph Paynel's grant to Trinity Priory, now advanced a claim. Dr. Whitaker, who alludes to the matter in his Loidis and Elmete, evidently considered that this claim was of the nature of a fraud: but though the information we possess on the subject is meagre, there is something in the evidence to suggest that the title of Trinity to the advowson was not perfect, and indeed the fact that the dispute was not finally settled until 1237, and then only by a considerable sacrifice of land and revenue on the part of the Priory, shows that the claim of Kirkstall must have had some weight. The subject is an interesting one, but it belongs more particularly to the history of Adel, and may be more fully discussed in that connection hereafter.

William Paynel remained tenant-in-chief of Cookridge, Adel, and Arthington during the third quarter of the 12th century. In the meantime the family bearing the local name had become established at Arthington, and the Cluniac nunnery there had been founded.

The first official mention of the Arthington family is in the Pipe Roll of 12 Henry II., 1166. There it is recorded among the pleas before Count Geoffrey and Richard de Luci, that William, son of Robert, owed a hundred shillings to the Crown because he failed of his appeal respecting the murder of his sister. His pledges were Roig', son of Peter de Ardint', and Hugh de Horsetona. This Peter was the founder of the Nunnery. In the Monasticon Anglicanum is printed an extract from an award copied by Roger Dodsworth¹ from the original among the evidences of Henry Arthington of Arthington. It was made in 28 Henry VI. by John Thwayts, as arbitrator in a dispute between the Prioress of Arthington of the one part, and John Arthington, esquire, of the other part, and it contains the following paragraphs bearing upon the early history of the Priory and the founder's family:—

(1) Dods. MSS., xcii., fo. 59. Dodsworth made extracts from the evidences at Arthington in January, 1645, and again in April, 1647.

“And be¹ the Pope Alexander's bull² confirming the gyft of Peeres of Arthington that gaffe them the place the whilk the said Abbey is bygged³ on, with all the appurtenances, and the gyft of the said Serle, Peers' son, of Bedesholm and Hubardholm, and all the lands betwixt Tebecroft and Souterkeld, and half a ploghe-land in Litell-Burdon; and of the gyft of Peers, the said Serle son, one acre of land next his land in Tebecroft, and half an acre of land of the gyft of his moder, in the hede of Lincroft.”

The Arbitrator then goes on to say that he had seen

“Notable evidence in writing be deeds be whilk Serle of Arthington gaffe Bedesholme and Hubardholme, confirmeing the gyfts of Peers his fader in and to the prioress and convent of the said nownree . . . and be a deed that Peers, son of Serle Arthington, giffs, grants, and confirms all the gifts that the said Serle and his ancestors gaffe to the nownes, and be the said deede gaffe to the said nownes one acre of land in Tebecroft, and also all the watyre that thei may lede to make yam a mylne with: and allso Geoffrey, son of Peers, gaffe to the said nownez half an acre of land in Tebecroft next joyning to their owne land in Tebecroft, with a conferment of all the gifts precedent.”

This statement, if we may rely on it, is sufficiently definite as to the first three generations of the Arthington family. It is affirmed that deeds had been inspected, by which Peter de Arthington granted the site of the Nunnery,—that his son Serlo confirmed this and gave other lands,—and that a second Peter, son of Serlo,⁴ in turn confirmed the gift of Serlo “and his ancestors.” Peter de Arthington and Roger son of Peter de Arthington occur among the witnesses to the before-mentioned deed of William Paynel, dated 1162, though there is in this case the unusual circumstance of the son being placed before the father in the list of witnesses. These were doubtless the two persons named in the Pipe Roll of 1166. I do not find frequent mention of Serlo, Peter's son, but in a grant of land in Allerton to Kirkstall Abbey, by Sampson de Allerton,—one of the earliest Kirkstall deeds, possibly prior to 1160,—Serlo de Arthington and Roger his brother are among the witnesses. In 1186 another Peter, son of Serlo and grandson of the first Peter, appears as the proprietor,¹ and thenceforward the descent of the family becomes tolerably clear.

(4) The writer of a short paper on the family in the Herald and Genealogist, vi., p. 132, suggests that Serlo's wife was Agas, or Agace, daughter of Vavasour of Weston, who was a benefactress to the Nunnery. She would appear, however, from a charter printed in the Bradford Antiquary, i., p. 211, to have been in reality the daughter of Stephen, parson of the church of Thorner. If she married Serlo she must have been his second wife, as the charter (which grants to her in free marriage a carucate of land in Arthington held by Stephen) is witnessed both by Serlo and Peter his son. The Vavasours did, however, hold land in Arthington; in a deed of the 13th century Ralph de Arthington refers to two bovates there which had formerly been the property of Hugh Vavasour.

It was not long before the Kirkstall monks made their way into the valley of the Wharfe. At fo. 28 of the Kirkstall Coucher-book are copies of four charters by Peter de Arthington, making various grants to the Abbey. The first copy, which is not the oldest charter, conveys a toft in Burdon which had been Robert's, brother of Berenger, also pasture for three hundred sheep on Arthington Bank: the second, eight acres and a rood in the common field of Arthington: the third and fourth, which are probably earliest in date, grant the land and house of Hugh the shepherd (bercarius) in Arthington, and half a carucate there, together with certain villeins. The last of these charters appears to have been exemplified and extended by another, which has been copied by Dodsworth in his eighth volume, fo. 48, and which is to the following effect:—

“Know all present and future that I, Peter de Ardington, have given, granted, and confirmed to God, St. Mary, and the monks of Kirkstall, half a carucate of land in Ardington, with all its appurtenances and easements within the vill and without,—namely, two bovates which Adam son of Aschetin held, together with the same Adam and his family [sequela] and all his chattels, and half an acre in the turbary in the middle of Mossley, and other two bovates which William son of Berenger held, together with the same William and all his family and chattels, and the land between Werf [Wharfe] and Ruterdeford, and an acre of meadow at Siwardemor which William son of Berenger essarted [i.e., cleared from wood] which was Aschetin's, son of Adam, and a certain meadow between Pickel [or Pilkel] and Michelholm, and an acre of meadow beside Ketelpoleker towards the east; and Godefrid son of Alexander with all his family and chattels. To be held in pure and perpetual alms, &c., doing the foreign service which appertains to half a carucate of land where twenty carucates make a knight's fee. (Warranty.) Witnesses:—Adam de Rainville, Thomas his son, William de Leley, Hugh his son, Simon de Monte Alto, William his son, Ralph de Bramhope, . . . le Scot, William Peitevin, Hugh de Witon, Nigel de Horsford.”

The grantor was the second Peter de Arthington, and the period probably about a century after Domesday. Coupled with other grants to Kirkstall, it enables us to form some idea of the advance which had been made during that century. In place of the Domesday picture of desolation and waste, there are sufficient signs of progress and improvement. Churches and religious houses had been built: a new body of country gentry were taking their places on the land: more houses had been erected, more villeins settled on the soil, more land cleared. At the time of Domesday, apparently only one villein was resident in Arthington. But now, Peter gives to the Abbey three villeins with their families: and these were by no means all the men of that class he possessed in the vill. One of the charters refers to considerable land held by Peter in demesne: and much had also been given to the Nunnery, and was doubtless now in process of improvement. It may safely be said that the grants to Kirkstall would not prove any check to the advancement of the village. The Cistercians had not yet assumed the rôle of great landlords: they were practical cultivators as well as grantees of the soil, and we may be assured that no carucate given to them was long permitted to remain altogether "waste." The enlargement of spirituality meant also an increase in agricultural activity: and the monk was not long in setting his lay brethren and his villeins actively at work to build granges, clear woods, and enclose meadows, upon the lands which he acquired.

The names of the witnesses to the above charter are of interest. Adam de Rainville, who doubtless came from Bramley with Thomas, his son, to attest the deed, was son of that William de Rainville who was one of the earliest benefactors to Kirkstall. The Rainvilles were high in favour with the great house of Lacy, and Adam was seneschal of Robert de Lacy. William de Leley (Leathley) was the owner of a large part of the vill of Horsforth, and Nigel de Horsforth was a tenant of the Mauleverers there, and the first known to us of a family destined to be associated with the place for a long period. William Peitevin was lord of Headingley. Simon de Monte Alto held East Keswick from the lords of Harewood. Hugh de Witon was the son of William de Witon, to whom lands were granted by Alexander or William Paynel and Roger Mustel,¹ and who obtained a further estate near Adel by marriage.

Peter de Arthington (the second) seems to have had some rights in the lands of Cookridge which had been granted by Roger Mustel to Kirkstall. These rights were cleared out of the way of the monks by a fine passed at York on the 19th August, 1192, when the Abbey gave Peter five marks and a half for a final surrender. At a period probably not very distant from this date, he married his son and heir Geoffrey to Mary, sister of Roger Scot of Calverley. His marriage-gift to them was a carucate of land in Arthington, and the villeins thereon,—namely, Alan son of Godwin, Hugh Caperun, William son of Lewin, and Malger son of Berenger. These villeins held six bovates, and the other two bovates comprised in the carucate were those which Serlo, a brother of Peter, probably dead, had held. At the same time, Roger Scot gave to Geoffrey and Mary half a carucate of his demesne land in Calverley: this remained with the Arthingtons until the time of Robert, Geoffrey's grandson. Peter de Arthington was living in 1200, in which year he is named in a suit between Robert de Beulers and Richard de Bretherton. His wife's name was Hawise, as appears from a charter (dated 1186) by which he gave two bovates in Arthington to the Hospitallers. Besides Geoffrey, he had a son named Henry, and a daughter, Amabilis, who in her widowhood gave seven and a half acres to Arthington Nunnery. There is also a grant by Alexander, son of Peter de Arthington, to Matilda, daughter of dominus Geoffrey de Arthington, of the bovat of land in Arthington which William son of Berning held.

With William Paynel's son William, who died about 1203, the direct male line of the Paynels ended, and the overlordship of Adel and Arthington passed to the Luterel family. There is an interesting fine, levied at York on the 29th February, 1204, between the heiresses of William Paynel (the younger) on the one hand, and Elias, abbot of Kirkstall, on the other hand. The Abbey had, it appears, acquired a considerable tract of land in Hooton Pagnell, the chief seat of the Paynels in Yorkshire; and this land the abbot now surrendered, on condition that the whole of the lands in the soke of Adel which had been granted to the monks by William Mustel and his ancestors were confirmed. The large consideration given by the abbot for this confirmation indicates anxiety to strengthen his title to the property claimed in Adel. At this time, the dispute between the Abbey and Trinity Priory was still undecided.

Geoffrey de Arthington succeeded Peter his father,¹ and he was living in 1237, as appears by his attesting a grant by Adam, son of Hugh de Witon, in that year. To another charter, likewise quoted in

(1) The writer of the paper in the Herald and Genealogist, before alluded to, introduces a generation (unnamed) between Peter and Geoffrey; I do not know on what authority. Geoffrey is referred to as Peter's son, both in the charter relating to his marriage with Mary Scot, in a charter by Robert de Brearey to Kirkstall Abbey, and in other deeds. (Dods., viii., 49d.)

Dodsworth's 8th volume, Geoffrey de Arthington and Ralph, his son, are witnesses. Ralph had succeeded his father in 1251, as appears by a grant of common by him to Robert de Pool in that year (Dods. xcii. 37). To this charter Dodsworth appends a sketch of his seal. Another deed copied by Dodsworth (cxliii., fo. 4) proves that Ralph was living in 1274. In the Miscellanea of the Thoresby Society, i. 125, is a note of a charter by which Ralph de Arthington confirmed to Richard, son of the lord of Goldsbrough, certain lands in Arthington.¹ Perhaps the most important document in connection with Ralph is a long charter of confirmation granted by him to Arthington Nunnery. That house had now been in existence a century. It was founded, as before stated, by the first Peter de Arthington, and was of the Cluniac order, affiliated to the great Cluniac Priory of Charité-sur-Loire, in the diocese of Auxerre. Unfortunately, the earlier charters are not now forthcoming, but in the deed of confirmation now under notice, Ralph no doubt included all that his people had given. Describing himself as Radulphus, son of Galfrid de Arthington, he confirms to the nuns all the essart which was Huctred's, with the meadow, and all the lands of Mekylholm and Bedeshuseholm, Hubertholm, Milneholm, the essart of Serlo, and all the land between Tebbecroft and the stream of Suterkeld: the essart of Gamel, and half a carucate of land in Little Burdon: the site of the old mill, with the little essart between the mill and the alder-grove: two bovates in Arthington which Hugh Trenchenel held: half an acre in the head of Lincroft and common-rights, and all the waters of his fee, to the benefit of their house. This document was witnessed by Richard de Luterington, Richard de Mora, and others. It is possible to form an approximate idea of the position of some of the property named. The land in the various "holmes" lay alongside the river: the tithe-map still indicates the Holme pastures, to the west of the present Arthington Hall, and beyond the mill. Bedeshouseholm suggests the grange still known as Bedelam, or more popularly Bedlam. Tebcroft is referred to in a later charter as being in the holme near the mill, between the Wharfe and the mill-goit. At the dissolution it was in demesne, and comprised eleven acres of arable and pasture land. South of the mill was apparently a small essart, beyond which lay an alder thicket, separating Hubert or Hubbard-holme from the mill-holme. The reference to the old mill indicates that since Domesday two mills had been successively erected in Arthington. The land in Burdon was further south, in the direction of Eccup and Harewood. Possibly at this period the Arthington family had a park extending to Arthington Bank: the "Old Park" is still marked on the tithe-map, where the house known as Bank Foot now stands, and the tradition that it was once a deer-park still lingers in the village. Through the gate with large stone pillars, immediately adjacent, the ancient road to Adel may still be traced, winding through the field towards the thicket which has now sprung up in the Old Park.

(1) In the Miscellanea above named the grant is printed (following the copy made by Tillotson) "Ralfe de Ardinton confirmed to Richard his son, lord of Goldsbrough, and his heirs, all the land," &c. It may be well to correct this somewhat serious mistake of Tillotson's. The grant is to Richard, son of the lord of Goldsbrough—"Ricardo filio domini de Goldesburgh"—not to a son of Ralph. (Dods., cxliii., fo. 6d.)

The Arthington family, though the earliest and most constant, were by no means the only local benefactors to the Nunnery. For instance, in 1262 Alan, son of Adam de Creskeld, gave half a bovate in Arthington—the deed being witnessed by Ralph de Arthington, William de Alwaldeley,¹ and Robert, "parson of Adel," possibly Robert Norman, who, Torre says, was instituted to that rectory in 1242. Hugh de Creskeld gave the service of Jordan de Bingley, clerk, which was a pound of incense yearly; this gift is earlier, Geoffrey Arthington, Ralph's father, being a witness, as well as Alan, rector of Adel, and Thomas de Wich (? Wike), rector of Harewood, two incumbents not named in Torre's lists. In 1254, John, son of Hugh de Rigton, gave the nuns a messuage and two bovates of land in the village,—those which Adam, son of Astin, formerly held, and which afterwards Alexander, son of Peter de Arthington, (gave) to his sister Alice. Outside the township of Arthington the nuns made considerable acquisitions. The early owners of Harewood were chiefly interested, ecclesiastically, in the Priory of Bolton, to which they had made large grants in the parish of Harewood: but by an early charter,—before 1172,—Avicia, daughter of William Meschin, and widow of Robert de Courcy, lady of Harewood, gave the Nunnery land in Helthwaite and pasture rights in Swindon,² on condition that she was to have the right of nominating a nun-resident. Also, the local families in possession of

(1) The family of Alwoodley—often spelt Alwaldley, and in several other ways—was represented early in the 13th century by Henry, a contemporary of Geoffrey de Arthington. He may have been a son of Gamel de Alwaldelay, who occurs in the previous century. Henry's son, William de Alwoodley, was living in 1237. William de Alwoodley, perhaps a son of the former William, held two carucates of land in Alwoodley in 1284-5. Roger de Alwoodley died in 24 Edw. I., leaving the two carucates and a water-mill in Alwoodley to four daughters, co-heiresses. In the return of knights' fees 31 Ed. I. the heirs of William de Aldewaldeley are entered as holding the land. The name did not altogether die out with Roger. William de Alwaldlay is witness to a charter dated 17 Edw. II., now in the possession of the Vicar of Bramley. By a charter the date of which I am unable to fix, Jordan de Alueldeleia and Annais his wife granted to the nuns of Sinningthwaite all his flat on Brunnumbanc, and pasture for 160 sheep in Alueldeleia.

(2) Helthwaite and Swindon are north of the river, near Dunkeswick.

the vills of Stubhouse¹ (now reduced to a single house, half a mile east of Burdon Head) and Lofthouse, near Harewood, made considerable donations. Hugh, son of Fulco, for the health of his soul and the soul of Eugenia his wife, gave all his land in Alwoodley, which Alexander de Burdon had granted to him. Westward from Arthington, property in Pool had been acquired from various benefactors: and later, the rectory of Maltby, near Doncaster, was given by Roger de Clifford.²

The site of the Nunnery is supposed to have been near the river, where the old house known as Nunnery Farm now stands, eastward from the present Arthington Hall, and opposite Rawdon Hill: but it is not considered that any part of the ancient buildings can now be traced.³ In the ninth volume of the Yorkshire Archaeological Journal is an interesting description of the house, taken at the time of the suppression. From this it appears that the Church was then,—and it is not likely to have been enlarged since the period with which we are now concerned,—sixty feet long and twenty-four feet wide: in the choir were “eighteen olde stalles of woode for nonnes” and “a roode lofte of tymbre.” There was a wooden steeple on the Church. The chapter-house was placed on the north side of the Church,—an unusual position,—and the cloister was “lxiii foote aboute and x foote brode.” There was an old dorter, sixty feet by fourteen; an old frater, at the north side of the cloister, sixteen feet by twelve, with two unglazed windows, and numerous other rooms and offices: and at the east and south ends of the Church were a fair garden and orchard.

In the Monasticon Anglicanum is given an imperfect list of the prioresses of the house, which commences as follows:—

MATILDA DE KASEWIK, died 1299.

AGNES DE SCREVIN.

AGNES DE PONTEFRACT, confirmed 1302.

(1) Burton (Mon. Ebor., p. 89) says, following Stevens, that Avicia, daughter and heiress of Geoffrey Woodhouse, gave the homage and service of Richard de Stubhouse for the lands he held in that vill. Geoffrey's name was Stubhouse, not Woodhouse, and his wife's name Margery. The grant by his daughter Avicia is copied at fo. 61 of Dodsworth's 92nd volume; also a confirmation by Henry de Stubhouse, brother of Geoffrey, dated on St. Dunstan's Day, 1246, and witnessed by Richard de Mora, Jordan de Bingley, Adam de Witun, Roger de Newhale, and others. There is also a confirmation of Avicia's grant by Margaret de Rivers, lady of Harewood. Further, as regards this local family, I find that Henry de Stubhouse gave to Eugenia, his daughter, a toft and six acres of land in Stubhouse. This was probably the Eugenia, wife of Hugh Fitz-Fulco, mentioned above. Henry also occurs as a witness in 1237. In 1264 a carucate of land was held of the manor of Harewood by Katherine, daughter of Richard de Stubhouse; and Adam de Stubhouse held two carucates of land in Stubhouse in 1284-5.

(2) Other donations are mentioned in Burton's Mon. Ebor. There is also an interesting paper on the Priory in Old Yorkshire (second series), p. 148.

(3) The present house is a picturesque old edifice containing an oak-panelled room with panelled ceiling. There is a stone over the door with the initials T. B. and date 1585, but Whitaker considers this to be only an insertion from some other building, and suggests that the house is of the time of Charles I.

ISABELLA DE BERGHLEY, admitted 1311.

MATILDA DE BATHLEY, elected 1312.

ISABEL BAUTRE.

ISABEL DE BENYGHLEY, elected 1349.

The last was doubtless a member of the local family of Bingley. A prioress Sarah, possibly still earlier than any of the foregoing, is named in a deed of 1241, quoted in the Appendix to the 36th Report of the Deputy-Keeper of the Records. There is a seal of the house, not very perfect, attached to a deed among the Duchy of Lancaster records. It is $1\frac{3}{8}$ inches in diameter; the device is a figure of the Virgin, standing: the legend has probably been "Sigill' S^ce Marie de Ardintun."

The Arthingtons appear to have had certain lands in Creskeld, but the chief ownership in that vill was vested from an early period in a family bearing the local name. The earliest member of this family on record was Peter, whose son Roger attests a deed of 1174. Hugh de Creskeld was witness to an agreement between Kirkstall Abbey and Robert de Monte Alto, in 1 Rich. I. He also occurs in other charters of the same period, as a benefactor to Kirkstall, Arthington Nunnery, and Adel Church. He appears to have had several sons, William, Ralph, Walter, and a daughter, Margery; and he was succeeded in his estate by his sons William and Ralph successively. Another Hugh de Creskeld and Walter his son witness a deed in the time of Henry, Abbot of Kirkstall, about 1280. William de Creskeld and his son Richard occur in the time of Ralph de Arthington, as do also Geoffrey and Alan, sons of Adam and Honesta de Creskeld. In the first half of the 13th century a family bearing the name of Bingley appear to have commenced acquiring land in Creskeld and Arthington. Jordan de Bingley, a cleric, obtained from Simon Curthose a bovaté of land in Creskeld, which was confirmed by Emma, Simon's widow, in 1244. Emma also confirmed to Jordan a bovaté in Creskeld which Walter de Lanaria had held from Kirkstall Abbey, and to William de Bingley the croft in which she had dwelt in the same vill. Margery, daughter of Hugh de Creskeld, confirmed to Master Gilbert de Bingley the bovaté of land which Robert son of Walter held, a toft, a croft, and an acre of meadow. Hugo de Creskeld granted to Jordan de Bingley eight acres from his demesne in Creskeld, and Ralph his son gave the same Jordan all Bramflat. Helias de Castley granted to Jordan de Bingley a bovaté of land with a toft and croft in Creskeld. Sigeric, widow of Alan de Barkston, in 1251 demised to Master Gilbert de Bingley two parts of a bovaté of land in Arthington for a term of eleven years.¹ Jordan's two brothers, William de Harwod (probably the William de Bingley mentioned above), and Thomas, are mentioned in one of these charters. I am unable to say whether Gilbert was another brother; he was also an ecclesiastic, holding the rectory of Thornhill. By the time of Kirkby's Inquest it would appear that the Creskeld family had ceased to hold any considerable lands in the vill; at any rate, their name does not appear in the return, but the heirs of Jordan de Bingley then held the fifth part of a knight's fee in Creskeld and Arthington. The Bingleys were relations of the Goldsborough family, to whom their lands in Creskeld appear to have passed.²

The statute of mortmain, restraining donations of land to religious houses, was passed in 7 Edward I., and thenceforward the charters to those houses, so rich a mine of genealogical evidence, are comparatively few. By this period, however, other sources of information are opening to us. First of these may be mentioned the Inquisition as to the ownership of lands in Yorkshire in 1284-5, known as "Kirkby's Inquest." From it we learn that by this time Ralph de Arthington was dead, and that Robert, his son, had succeeded him. Robert now held the vill (for half a knight's fee) from the abbot of Kirkstall,³ and he from "Thomas Muschell," at the fee-farm rent of three marks before mentioned: Thomas in turn holding from Andrew Luterel, heir of the Paynels, by military tenure. The fee-farm rent also covered half a knight's fee in Adel and Creskeld. Robert is alluded to as the son of Ralph de Arthington in the charter by which, as has been previously stated, he alienated the land in Calverley which had come to his grandfather Geoffrey by his marriage with Mary Scot. This charter, now in the British Museum (Add. Ch. 16,583) bears a fragment of his seal, showing a knight on horseback: it would seem, therefore, that the three escallop shells, the well-known bearing of the family, did not as yet appear on their seal. Robert is similarly referred to as Ralph's son in an agreement made with the prioress of Arthington at Whitsuntide, 1287, quoted by Dodsworth (viii., fo. 39). He was dead in

(1) Most of the above grants relating to Creskeld are taken from the abstracts in Dodsworth's 143rd volume.

(2) In the latter part of the 13th century Gilbert, Abbot of Kirkstall and the convent thereof, confirmed to Richard, son of Richard de Goldsburg, all the land in Creskeld which he had of the gift of Master Gilbert de Bingley. Gilbert de Bingley is referred to as uncle of the younger Richard.

(3) At the Dissolution the Arthingtons held the manor from the Abbey at a free rent of sixpence. —See Ministers' Accounts, 31-32 Henry VIII., No. 174.

1303, and his son Lawrence had succeeded to his estate. On 16th November, 1309, Lawrence de Arthington granted to Richard de Goldsborough a parcel of land in the field of Arthington, between Stainflat on the one side and Tebbecroft on the other, near the King's highway:¹ witnesses, Mauger le Vavassur and William de Pennington, knights, William de Castelay, William de Ilketon, William de Adel, Henry Forester, and others. William de Adyll, "manens in Arthyngton,"—doubtless the witness in the last named deed,—on 6th May, 1319, granted to Lawrence, son of Robert de Arthington, two tofts and crofts and two bovates of land in Arthington, which he (William) had by grant of the said Robert: witnesses, Richard de Goldesburgh, Adam de Swynlyngton, knights, Simon Delaroche, William de Ilketon, William de Castelay, Richard de Wigdon. Lawrence was a commissioner for raising the defensible men of the wapentake against the Scots, 1 Edward III, and 8 Edward III. At this period we have a subsidy-roll for Arthington (1 Edward III.). The following are the names and the amounts levied, as printed in the Thoresby Society's Miscellanea, i. 95:—Lawrence de Arthington, 3s.; Richard de Goldesburgh, 2s. 6d.; Jordan faber, 12d.; William fil' Sarre, 9d.; Walter Car....., 9d.; total, 8s. Finally, as regards Lawrence de Arthington, there is a charter given by him 20th February, 1334,² granting to Adam Forester of Wigdon and Agnes his wife, for life, two messuages and four bovates of land in Arthington, which Roger, son of the grantor, formerly held. This would seem to indicate that Roger, son of Lawrence, was then dead. He probably left a son Robert, who succeeded his grandfather, as in 1347 Richard Poyde, son of Katherine Poyde, of Arthington, quit-claims to Robert, son of Roger de Arthington, lord of Arthington, all rights in a toft in the vill. On 11th August, 1356, by a deed made at Arthington, John, son of William de Castley,³ releases to Robert de Arthington his part of the watermill of Castley, the witnesses being John Chaumberlyn of Newton, William Frank of Alwoodley, Robert de Castley, and others.

(1) Dods. MSS., xcii., fo. 57.

(2) Dods. MSS., xcii., fo. 57.

(3) The local family of Castley was of some importance. The first on record is William de Castley, named in the Pipe Roll of 1165-6. Henry de Castley, Hameric de Castley, and Nigel his brother, were all early members of the family, contemporaries of Peter de Arthington, father of Geoffrey. (Dods., cxliii., fo. 9d.) Elias, son of Henry, occurs in 1254 and 1262. He held property in Creskeld from St. Leonard's, York, which he parted with to the Bingleys. William de Castley occurs in 1244; in 1284 William de Castley was joint holder of Castley from the Percy family; and William de Castley, sen., and William de Castley, jun., are referred to in 1317 and 1322. (Rawlinson MSS., B. 455.) In the deed alluded to in the text above, John de Castley, son of William, mentions his brother William deceased, and Robert de Castley is a witness.

On 20th July, 1363, a deed of settlement was executed by Robert de Arthyngton, granting to his son Robert and heirs male the manor of Wyke, near Hipperholme ; remainder to another son, Thomas ; remainder to another son, Richard. To this deed, which was made at Wyke, Brian de Thornhill and John de Saville, Knights, Robert de Bolling, John de Lascy, and John de Quarmby were witnesses.

It will be observed that the descent of the family, as set forth in this paper, differs materially both from that in the Visitation of 1612 and from that given by Thoresby in the Ducatus. The latter, indeed, is simply a copy—so far as the earlier generations are concerned—of the pedigree put together by Hopkinson, for whose genealogical achievements Thoresby had a respect which we now know to have been but little warranted. Thoresby was a friend of Cyril Arthington, and an occasional visitor to Arthington Hall. It is somewhat surprising that he did not contrive to obtain the same access to the ancient muniments there (if they were still there) which had been so freely allowed to Roger Dodsworth half a century before. Had he done so, he must soon have discovered the necessity for recasting the pedigree which he ultimately printed in the Ducatus.

THE PEDIGREE.

Pawson bears Gules, a Chevron between three Lions' Paws erased Or.

THE Pedigree of Pawson, beginning with John of Kirkgate, is to be found on page 77 of Thoresby's Ducatus, with the remark: "I thought it rare to meet in one hand (as here) with the wills of the father, grandfather, great grandfather, and his father (the Abavus, or "ƿeopða ƿæðeƿ," as our Saxon ancestors called them), and of all their wives too, with the probate annexed." These are still in my possession.

The earlier generations are probably to be found at Otley; but who or what Richard Pawson, the father of John, was, and what trade or handicraft he professed, signifies little or nothing. His "quiver was full" of two daughters and seven sons, launched on the world in the best of all possible courses—that of honest industry. His eldest son, John, was a clothmaker by trade, and also a farmer. A similar combination is often found in Normandy. The sound of the shuttle is heard close to the farm-yard and the fruit-laden apple trees. His plate consisted of five silver spoons, worth three shillings each. He had two daggers at his girdle, to defend his purse and his life, as he rode his horse on his hackney saddle. However respectable a tradesman, his accommodation was bare in the extreme, according to modern views of comfort. The "office-house" was his kitchen, the only room possessing a fireplace. The parlour served as bedroom, on the ground floor, warmed only by leaving open the door between it and the kitchen. There were two bedstocks in it, and it also served as a store-room for flitches of salt beef—the winter provision of our frugal ancestors. The chamber was a granary for corn threshed out, for wool, and for the alum used in dyeing it. The "arks" probably held meal for the pigs and flour for the household. Here the bread was kneaded, and the wool stored. The three apprentices evidently slept at their own homes.

The "dossans of cloth" were pieces of 12 yards, as Thoresby explains on page 81 of his Ducatus. They were worth 2s. 9d. the yard, knocking off 13s. on the whole, or one halfpenny per yard, which was probably a customary allowance for waste and selvedge. Some of the yarn was in the houses of various spinners, work being put out then as gloves are given out to be sewn at Grenoble, in France, and as the "plait" for straw bonnets is made in the villages near Hitchin and Luton.

John Pawson's wife and only child each received £69 18s. 5d. One cannot but be struck by the comparatively large sums given in legacies to his mother, his brothers and sisters, his nephews and nieces, and to his god-children. These, with his funeral expenses, his mortuary, the dole to the poor, and the pious work of repairing the highways, came to no less than £23 4s. 8d., just one-third of the provision made for the maintenance and education of his son, and the personal property of his widow. It does not appear that the house in Kirkgate was his own freehold; but he owned three tenements in Marsh Lane, and three roods of land in Woodhouse.

Thoresby Society.

REPORT FOR 1894.

THE Council of the Thoresby Society have the pleasure to present their Sixth Annual Report.

During the year twenty-four new Members have joined the Society, of whom one is Life and twenty-three Annual; and the number of Members on the Roll at the end of the year is 254.

The Council have still to regret that the publications of the Society are in arrear. They hope, however, that the interesting articles contained in the "Miscellanea" for 1893, and the "Registers of Adel" for over two hundred years, with views of the Church, which have recently been issued, will, in some degree, compensate the members for the delay. The "Calverley Charters" are in the press, and another "Miscellanea" is in preparation, and it is hoped that these will be issued for the year 1894.

A very successful Conversazione was held in the Philosophical Hall in the month of February, and a large collection of portraits, views, relics and antiquities, relating to Leeds and district, were exhibited by members of the Society, who kindly placed their collections at the disposal of the Council.

Excursions were arranged during the summer to Selby, Cawood and Brayton, on May 26th; to Ripon and Markenfield, on June 30th; and the Society took part in the two-days' excursion to York, on July 25th and 26th, of the Yorkshire Archæological Society; and it is believed that these meetings were thoroughly enjoyed and appreciated by the members who joined them.

The Council have arranged an exchange of publications with fifteen kindred Societies, and have, by this means, much improved the Library. The Librarian will attend at the Society's Room on the first Monday evening in each month, for the purpose of giving members access to the Society's collections.

The history of Leeds is to a large extent contained in the records and muniments of the Leeds Corporation, and until these are published the development of its industries and municipal life cannot be properly studied. Some Corporations have published their records, and the Council hope that the time may be at hand when the City Council will follow the example of those Corporations. "No country, indeed," says Mrs. Green, in her recent work on the subject, "has been so backward as our own in municipal history, whether we take it from the popular or from the scientific side. The traveller who has asked at the bookshop of a provincial town for a local history, or even for a local guide, is as well able to realise the distance which parts us from France, Italy, or Germany, as is the student who inquires for a detailed account of how civic life or any one of its characteristic institutions grew up among us."

Court rolls, records, and documents of much interest, are also contained in the muniment rooms and libraries of the nobility and gentry in the neighbourhood of Leeds ; and if the owners could be induced to allow the Society to publish extracts, our local knowledge of the past would be much extended.

The Council feel that they cannot close their report without expressing their deep regret at the recent death of their colleague, Mr. F. R. Kitson. Mr. Kitson was one of the most active members of the Council, and took much interest in the Conversazione, the Excursions, and the Publications.

Thoresby Society.

REPORT FOR 1895.

THE Council of the Thoresby Society have the pleasure to present their Seventh Annual Report.

During the year one Life and twenty-three Annual Members have joined the Society, and the number of Members on the Roll at the end of the year is 264, of which 224 are Annual, and forty Life.

For the year 1894 the "Leeds Parish Church Registers," up to the year 1639, and Index completing Volume 3, and a portion of the "Calverley Charters" in the British Museum, have been printed; and it is intended, for 1895, to issue another part of the "Miscellanea," and a first portion of the "Kirkstall Abbey Coucher Book."

In the early part of the year meetings of the Society were held as follows:—On the 15th January, when lantern-slides illustrative of "Old Leeds" were exhibited by Mr. Godfrey Bingley; on 12th February, when a paper was read by Mr. F. W. Bedford, on "The Mediæval Manor "House"; on the 12th March, when a paper was read by Mr. Samuel Margerison, on "Calverley."

During the summer three pleasant Excursions were made to Esholt and Calverley Hall, to Boroughbridge and Aldborough, and to Skipton Church, Castle, and Bolton Priory, which were all well attended.

The Council hope that every member will assist them in making an effort to largely increase the membership of the Society.

They feel that there must be many persons who take an interest in the history and antiquities of Leeds, who might be persuaded to join the Society.

The Council regret that the publications are still in arrear. The second part for 1894 is in a very forward state, and will be issued shortly, and the publications for 1895 are in the press. The Council have confidence in asking for the indulgence of members in this respect, and beg to point out that the Society bears the cost of printing only, the material being provided by a few members—much of it being transcribed with their own hands, under circumstances involving much labour and expenditure of time. It is not too much, therefore, to say that the members receive in the publications more than the value of their subscriptions, without taking note of the Excursions and meetings.

Members are again reminded that an attractive case for binding the publications has been provided, and that Volumes 1, 2, 3 and 5 are now complete.* The cases are in the hands of Messrs. Spink and Thackray, bookbinders, Boar Lane, Leeds; and as they have undertaken to bind the volumes on very reasonable terms if a number are placed in their hands at once, the Council hope that every member will avail himself of this opportunity, and so secure four handsome volumes on his shelves, instead of a number of loose parts in paper wrappers.

* The following is a list of the Publications to 1895:—

- Vol. I.—(1889-90-91) Leeds Parish Registers, 1572-1612.
- Vol. II.—(1889-90-91) Miscellanea.
- Vol. III.—(1892-94) Leeds Parish Registers, 1612-1639.
- Vol. IV.—(1892-93-95) Miscellanea.
- Vol. V.—(1893) Adel Registers.
- Vol. VI.—(1894), in progress, Calverley Charters.
- Vol. VII.—(1895), in progress, Leeds Parish Registers, 1639-1667.

Conversazione,

FEBRUARY 13, 1894.

THE winter programme of the Society included two Papers, communicated by Principal Bodington and Rev. W. Kerr-Smith.

The substance of the first Paper appeared in Vol. IV. part 1, of the Society's publications; that of the second will be found in the present issue. In addition to these interesting Papers, the Society arranged for a Conversazione and Exhibition of various objects of interest connected with the archæology of Leeds, for the evening of February 13th, 1894. As the date of the Conversazione unfortunately clashed with that of two or three other attractions, the Council were disappointed in the number of those who were able to come. The guests on arriving at the Philosophical Hall were received by Mrs. Wilson, wife of the President, in the Library, which had lost a portion of its wonted grimness through the energy of Mr. Wm. Howgate, who had devoted the whole day to arranging furniture, pictures, pottery, and various archæological knick-knacks with excellent effect. Several rooms were used for the exhibition of books, pictures, uniforms, and other things generously lent by many interested in past phases of Leeds life.

The collection, although the time at the disposal of the organizers allowed no classification, was well worthy of some hours' study, and those present occupied a full and pleasant three hours in the investigation of the various exhibits. One passed from Roman altars to Thoresby's walking-stick; from modern pictures of old Leeds buildings to inaccurate plans of one hundred and fifty years ago; from pottery produced among the green fields of peaceful Hunslet to the sterner suggestions conveyed by the uniforms of the early Volunteers of

Leeds, and the result was somewhat bewildering. There is no doubt, however, that there was material for a most interesting exhibition; and should the Society be in a position to arrange for a similar function at any future time, it is to be hoped that the exhibits will be arranged with more care, and that more time will be allowed for inspection of them.

There was a large collection of books (MS. and printed), which were, unfortunately, but feebly exhibited under a glass case. Some of the most interesting came from the Society's own Library, now gradually increasing through the gifts of members and the timely purchases of the Society. Members cannot be too often reminded that scarce works on archæology are more useful and more accessible in the Library of a body like the Thoresby Society, than in the Collection of a private individual; and that in a few years, if well supported by members, the present nucleus will expand into an invaluable Reference Library relating to the archæology of the district. Some excellent MSS. and books were lent by Mr. Alderson Smith, of Scarborough, Mr. Rawlinson Ford, the President, and others.

Among the pictures sent for exhibition were portraits of many local heroes of the past few generations, and an immense number of views and plans of old Leeds buildings. Some of these could lay claim to no little artistic merit; for example, the works of J. M. W. Turner, John Rhodes, Joseph Rhodes, C. W. Cope, and Schwanfèlder. Some, on the other hand, were merely valuable as a record, not always too accurate, of the past. Such a collection of Rhodes's pictures has probably never been seen together at any time. Amongst those who lent pictures were Dr. Chadwick, the Vicar of Leeds, Mr. Stansfeld, Mr. R. Wilson, Mr. Howgate, and the President.

Some had generously sent more damageable property, such as pottery, silver, furniture, uniforms, altars, and tobacco jars. Among these were Mr. R. Wilson, Mr. Stansfeld, Mr. Ford, Mr. Hawthorn Kitson, and other members of the Society.

In the early part of the evening, the Annual Meeting of the Society was held in the lecture hall, when no untoward incident enlivened the usual uneventful proceedings which constitute a general meeting. At nine o'clock, Mr. Kerr-Smith repeated his Paper on Armour, given to the Society at an earlier date, as mentioned above, and a band discoursed sweet music at intervals throughout the evening to the zoological specimens.

Members will be glad to learn that the entertainment was in no way a burden on the funds of the Society, as a large part of the expenses were subscribed privately by some members of the Council. A complete catalogue of the exhibits, with a list of all those who so generously lent their property, has been placed in the Library of the Society; and will not only be a memorial of a pleasant evening, but will be useful for future reference.

The Council is anxious to express its sense of indebtedness to the generous co-operation of these members, and the energy of those by whom the collection was made, arranged, and dispersed within twenty-four hours; and would especially mention the activity of Messrs. Hebblethwaite, Kitson, Bedford, and Denison, in this matter. There were, of course, mistakes—almost inevitable at a Society's first venture in such a field—but the experience gained will be a useful guide for the Society's action in the future.

MAY 26TH, 1894.

The Abbey Church of St. Germain, at Selby, the most perfect monastic church in the county, is of exceeding interest. Although we look regretfully at the "spicarium" or barn as the sole remnant of the monastic buildings, the church itself is an object-lesson in architecture.

The first two bays of the nave (looking west) date from about 1110,¹ and belong to the earliest part of the church, which consisted of nave and transepts, with apsidal chapels opening eastward, and chancel with apsidal termination. This arrangement, advanced as a theory, has been verified by recent excavations. Supporting the second bay is the pillar carved by Abbot Hugh himself as a labour of love. The third and fourth bays are Later Norman, the rest Transitional in character. The carving of the capitals is noticeable. The triforium is interesting: on the south it is Early English, on the north Transitional, where the arrangement of the detached shafts to the intermediate arches is peculiar, but effective. In the clerestory there is some fine dog-tooth moulding on the north side. The original Norman tower was low. It was raised in the Decorated period: the effect was its fall, and the destruction of the south transept in 1690. The west wall of the north transept gives us the only Norman window left in the church, and is probably the work of Abbot Hugh. The choir is a glorious example of the richest Decorated work. We noticed especially the foliated capitals and the deep moulding of the arches. The east window is a remarkably fine instance of late Decorated work, "flamboyant" in character. In design it recalls Carlisle; in glass, St. Mary's, Shrewsbury. The design consists of a "Jesse," and a "Doom" in the tracery lights. It has been skilfully reconstructed. The stone altar-screen, which is of the same period, shows richly-carved work, deeply undercut. The sedilia, which exactly recall those at Durham, are Perpendicular, as is also the great window of the north transept. In the sacristy we observed an Aumbry, three curious recesses [? for holding mitres], and a small lavatory, with space for a feeding-cistern. The chamber above is said to have been the Scriptorium. Re-entering the church, we noticed the south aisle windows, late Geometric. On the exterior, the Norman portal and Transitional porch, on the north side, are specially worthy of attention: still more so is the east end, with its buttresses and crocketed pinnacles. The view from the south-east is most striking.

BRAYTON.

The great glory of Brayton Church is its Norman south door. It shows an interesting combination of beak-head mouldings and medallions, and is in excellent preservation, due to the addition of the Perpendicular porch. The lower part of the tower, including the belfry windows, is also Norman. The reticulated work above the latter is effective. The chancel arch is, roughly, of the same epoch, but is rude in character.

WISTOW.

At Wistow we remarked:—In the north aisle, some fragments (pieced together) of fifteenth century glass; a good Decorated window, removed from the tower; in the chancel, an interesting but damaged Easter sepulchre, and the monument of a certain Dame Margery, with an inscription in Norman-French, presumably of the fourteenth century.

CAWOOD.

The chief interest in the Church lies in the very thin and elegant clustered shafts (Early English) carrying the south bays of the nave. A minor point is the monument to Bishop Montaigne (temp. Charles I.), who was a native of Cawood, and four times a bishop.

Of the somewhat scanty remains of the palace of the Archbishops, ruined during the Civil War, the beautiful gate-house is the chief. It is Perpendicular, dating from the time of Archbishop Kempe (1426–52). It was at Cawood that Wolsey was arrested, and through this portal that he passed to his death.

RIPON AND MARKENFIELD.

JUNE 30TH, 1894.

ON Saturday, June 30th, the members of the Thoresby Society left for Ripon, under the guidance of Mr. Bedford. On arrival at Ripon, waggonettes were in waiting, and the party drove across the North Bridge, which spans the river Ure—the boundary of the city at this point—and turning sharply to the left into St. Magdalene Road, halted within a few yards at the quaint old chapel of the Hospital of St. Mary Magdalene. From an inquisition taken in the time of King Edward III., it appears that this hospital was founded by Thurstan, Archbishop of York, in the early part of the twelfth century; but no records coeval with the foundation are extant. From an inscription over the door of the hospital, it was restored by Richard Hooks, D.D., a Prebendary of the Collegiate Church of Ripon, and Master of the Hospital in 1674. The old chapel, however, remains as it was left at the Reformation. The original structure, containing a rudely ornamented Norman doorway, was repaired during the Perpendicular era, when the screen and stalls were constructed. The east window is also an interesting specimen. The hospital shelters a number of Sisters, while new almshouses have been erected on the opposite side of the road, where also is a modern chapel, for which the late Rev. George Mason, of Copt Hewick Hall, gave £1,000 in 1869. The party next drove to the Cathedral, where, under the guidance of one of the vergers, the chief architectural features were pointed out.

As the Excursion was to be mainly devoted to the history of the Markenfields, special attention was devoted to the Markenfield Chapel, in the north transept of the Cathedral. This was formerly the Chapel of St. Andrew, and the groining in the square bay and flat dividing arch was noticeable on account of its early character. The piscina was a trifoliated aperture, and a projecting basin remains in the south wall. The only memorial remaining of the Markenfields is a fine altar-tomb of Sir Thomas Markenfield, a warrior in the time of Edward III., and his wife, the heiress of the Miniots of Carlton-Miniot, near Thirsk. There has also been removed from the north-east angle of this chapel an altar-tomb, on which are placed the effigies of Sir Thomas Markenfield and Eleanor, his wife, daughter of Sir John Conyers, of Hornby Castle. The date is 1497.

YORK MINSTER AND CITY.

JULY 25TH AND 26TH, 1894.

A visit was paid, at the invitation of the Yorkshire Archæological Society, to York. With regard to the Minster, at the outset Mr. Micklethwaite drew attention to the way in which the great Cathedral, which covers the largest area of any in England, was built in portions. But although this was the case, the idea of the original design was never lost sight of, being carried out with the greatest fidelity. He pointed out the magnificent proportions of the nave and transepts, which were erected first, and how all the rest of the structure harmonised with them. The many beautiful stained-glass windows of which the Minster boasts were not overlooked, and the cicerone declared that there was in York Minster more stained glass of an early period than in the rest of England put together. A move was then made to the Chapter-house, and some little time was spent in admiring this superb example of Gothic architecture. The building probably dates from about 1300, and Mr. Micklethwaite reminded the company that in those days the churches of the land vied with each other in the endeavour to erect the most beautiful chapter-house. The estimate which the builders of the one at York placed upon their efforts may be inferred from the inscription on one of the walls near the entrance—

“ Ut rosa phlos phlorum,
Sic est domus ista domorum.”

The exquisite beauty of the House is calculated to make a deep impression on the most unsympathetic observer. But Mr. Micklethwaite is not altogether satisfied, for he complained that the structure had suffered at the hands of renovators. The Lady Chapel, at the extreme east end of the Minster, was next visited. Here attention was drawn to the wonderful tracery of the famous east window, in which there is depicted in stained glass a very large part of Bible history. Some of the finest monuments in the Cathedral are situated hereabouts, and many of them were carefully scrutinised. Proceeding to the crypt, which had been specially illuminated by gas for the occasion, Mr. Micklethwaite explained that where there was a crypt the church was traditionally Saxon. When the choir at York was rebuilt in the fourteenth century, the crypt was rebuilt also, the old materials being used, though here and there new stones were put in, and these are easily discernible. The archæologists were directed to notice in the crypt the remains of the Norman and Saxon churches which stood on that site. These were discovered when the workmen were taking up the floor of the choir after Martin's fire, in 1829, and are peculiarly interesting. Continuing the tour of the Minster, the choir, Archbishop Zouche's Chapel, and the vestry were in turn inspected. In the last-named apartment, the visitors were, by the kindness of the Dean, afforded an opportunity of examining the Minster plate and other relics of antiquity, including the Horn of Ulphus. An explanatory statement of these was given by Mr. St. John Hope.

The afternoon's programme comprised a visit to the Minster Library, where Canon Raine acted as guide; and to Holy Trinity Church, Goodramgate; St. Martin's-le-Grand, Coney Street; and All Saints', North Street; Mr. Bilson being the cicerone.

In the evening the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress of York entertained one hundred members of the Society at a conversazione in the Mansion House. A selection of city charters and other ancient documents in the possession of the Corporation were exhibited in the small drawing-room, and the civic insignia, together with the Corporation plate, was displayed in the State-room. Mr. Arthur Leach read a paper on "A Beverley Guild Book," and was followed by Mr. W. H. St. John Hope, who contributed a paper on "The Civic Insignia of York," which, he said, yielded to none in their extreme historical interest and artistic value.

On the second day the inspection of the old Manor-house proved a most interesting occupation. In its time, this building has seen many changes. At the present moment it affords accommodation for the Yorkshire School for the Blind, which was established in memory of the great Wilberforce; but in the stirring times, from the reign of Henry VIII. to that of Charles I., it played a by no means unimportant part in history. There is not the slightest doubt that the oldest part of the Manor-house formerly belonged to the adjoining Benedictine Abbey of St. Mary's. But a difference of opinion prevails as to the use to which it was put by the monastic authorities. Hitherto it has always been supposed, and freely asserted, that it was the abbot's house; but no less an authority than Mr. St. John Hope—and he was supported by Mr. J. T. Micklethwaite—threw a douche of cold water on that surmise. He stated that he had asked for proofs and had searched for them himself, but had failed to find an authority for the assertion that it was the abbot's domicile. Failing such proof, he preferred to believe that the building was the infirmary of the monastery, for it was in the portion of the grounds where, judging from the plan adopted in other monastic establishments of the same period, the infirmary was always placed. Further than that, the site was the quietest corner of the abbey grounds, and on that account most suitable for the location of the infirmary. Mr. Hope, moreover, finds evidence which satisfies him that the abbot's house was some little distance away; in fact, near to where the Philosophical Society's Museum stands. If this vexed point is hereby elucidated, the visit of the archæologists to York will not have been in vain. But whether the building was the abbot's dwelling or the infirmary of the monastery, the fact remains that at the time the abbey was suppressed in 1538, Henry VIII. appropriated the house as an official residence for the President of the Council of the North, a body which had been constituted in the previous year. Those worthies continued to occupy it for over a hundred years. It was probably visited by Henry himself when he took up his quarters at York for three weeks, along with his last wife but one, Catherine Howard. Amongst the Lord Presidents who resided in the Manor-house were the Earl of Shrewsbury, Archbishops Holgate, Young, and Hutton, the Earl of Rutland, the Earl of Sussex, the Earl of Huntingdon (who died in it), Lord Burleigh, Lord Sheffield, Lord Scrope, and the ill-fated Earl of Strafford. The coat-of-arms of the last-named famous nobleman was placed by him over one of the entrances leading from the courtyard, where it is to be seen to this day; and one of the charges in his impeachment was that he had dared to do this at one of the king's palaces. From time to time, at this period of its history, the Manor-house was enlarged and improved, and the archæologists were at pains to mark the variations in the different extensions. Whatever may have been the case with Henry VIII., it is certain that James I. stayed here on his way from Scotland to London in 1603, whilst his consort was entertained there on her visit to the city in the following June. Charles I. lived at the manor for a month in 1639, and for three months in 1640. Shortly afterwards the Council of the North was abolished, and the manor was then handed over to the care of an officer. During the Civil War, the place was a Royalist garrison, and was besieged by the Parliamentarians. Afterwards, in the reign of James II., it was for a time in the hands of the Roman Catholics; was then let on lease by the Crown to certain city aldermen; and in 1837 was leased to the trustees of the School for the Blind, who have since bought the property. A tour was made by the archæological party under the guidance of the superintendent, and great interest was evinced in many of the quaint surroundings. Then a move was made into the St. Mary's Abbey grounds, where Mr. St. John Hope took upon himself the duties of cicerone. In the course of his valuable explanation, he went out of his way to express a hope that the authorities would without delay remove the ivy which is growing upon a portion of the walls in the nave, for it is, he says, creating mischief. A visit was naturally paid to the splendid museum which Canon Raine has been the means of establishing in the grounds. Here were to be seen many architectural gems, which have been rescued from destruction and decay amidst the general ruins; a number of Roman tombs, and also the unrivalled collection of Roman pottery and curiosities, most of which have been found from time to time in York. Canon Raine explained that many of these curiosities were discovered when the excavations were made for the railway stations, which stand on the site of what was in the time of the Roman occupation a great cemetery. The rev. gentleman believes that the gardens of the North-Eastern Railway Hotel were the choicest part of that cemetery, and he has no doubt that if excavations were made, a great quantity of relics would be unearthed. The afternoon was spent in examining one or two of the smaller churches in the city, the city walls, and the Castle.

Catalogue of Books,

Engravings, Drawings, &c.,

IN THE POSSESSION OF THE THORESBY SOCIETY.

ONE of the objects of the Society being "the collection and "preservation of Old Books, Deeds, Engravings, Plans, and "other interesting objects relating to Leeds and its neighbourhood," the Council has thought it desirable to print this List for the information of Members, and in the hope that the Collection will be materially enlarged by gifts from those who have not yet contributed.

Many entries of Books, &c., have the names attached thereto of those who presented them; but there are many instances where gifts have been made, and the names of Donors are now unknown. In such cases, Donors are requested to accept an apology for the omission of their names.

The Society is indebted to Mr. F. G. HARMER for the compilation of this List, whose labour has been freely given to a very tedious work.

The Foundation of Kirkstall Abbey,

ETC.

I.

THE following account of the Foundation of the Monastery of Kirkstall, including the names and some of the acts of the first sixteen Abbots, is taken from the Laud MS., Misc. 722, fol. 129–138, in the Bodleian Library. The history is written on ten leaves of paper, small quarto, and is rubricated. It is in good order, and the writing clear and legible. Side-notes in a different hand, indicating names and places, have been partially cut away by the binder. “Nota” or “notate” has been written here and there at the side, by a subsequent scribe, at places considered noteworthy. The handwriting is probably early 15th century. Part of this account is to be found in the 5th volume of Dugdale’s Monasticon Anglicanum, in the portion which relates to Cistercian Abbeys. From this volume and copies of it translations have been made, and the traditions of the 13th century, as recorded in the 15th century, have been set down as unquestioned history in the 19th century. An impartial and full transcript from the 15th century MS. in the Bodleian Library is now given, accompanied by an English version which will, it is hoped, appeal to the interest of, and provide material for investigation for such members as do not care to read the original. With regard to the proper names, such names as appear to have exact equivalents now in use have been rendered by such in the translation; those that appear doubtful have been repeated in the English, letter for letter, from the Latin. This course, inconsistent though it is, permits an escape from the difficulties of case terminations and continual alterations of spelling which are the stumbling-blocks of the over-exact, and avoids a reckless adoption of questionable renderings which prove often too seductive to those who aim at avoiding pedantry.

The document falls naturally into the following divisions:—

- f. 129—nearly the end of 132^b. Laurencio Clerico de Wyton concessa. A full account of the foundation of the abbey and of the first five abbots (1147–1210).
- f. 132. The names of the next nine abbots (1210–84), unaccompanied by incident.
- f. 132–f. 137. The possessions and debts of the establishment under the fifteenth abbot, and a long letter, enclosing copies of a grant, confirmation, and bonds, and dealing with transactions concerning the important grange of Micklethwaite, dated 1287.
- f. 137. The possessions of Kirkstall in 1301. A protection by King Henry, dated 1261, and repeated in substance in two documents by Edward in 1276.
- f. 138. A letter from the sixteenth abbot, who was created in 1304, describing his journey to the south on the business of the abbey, and adding instructions to the monks about internal matters.¹

This portion of the Laud MS. is followed by the following note,² in a later hand:—"Inuentum est in cronicis abbathie de Kyrkestall quod anno Regis Henrici [sic] quarto et anno domini m^ocxciii^o mensis augusti die xxj. videlicet xij. kalendas februarii [sic] obiit bone memorie dominus Robertus de Lascy secundus fundatur [sic] monasterij de Kyrkestall ibi sepilatur [sic].

It is intended that in subsequent publications of the Thoresby Society the facts appearing in the Fundacio Abbathie de Kyrkestall will be collated with the Charters included in the Coucher Book and in previous publications of the Society. The subject is fitly introduced in the Monasticon by a quotation from the history of the mother establishment. The "Narratio de Fundatione Fontanis Monasterii in comitatu Eboracensi" (Gale MSS. o.1.79 in the library of Trinity College, Cambridge) is a copy of a description of the origin of that abbey by one Hugh de Kirkstall in the year 1207 (Surtees Soc. Memorials of Fountains Abbey 1, p. 128), who narrates what is related by the aged Serlo, a monk who was present at the establishment of Fountains, and joined the mission to Barnoldswick, and afterwards to Kirkstall.

There the Foundation of Kirkstall Abbey is described in the following terms (ib. p. 90):—"In the year of the Incarnation of the Lord 1147, a certain man of noble rank, Henry, by name de Lacy, in the territory of York undertook the construction of a monastery of the Cistercian order. He accordingly assigned a spot, and erected a monastery; and there is sent to him a convent of monks under Abbot Alexander. This Alexander was one of our [of Fountains] first fathers, own brother of the Lord Richard, second Abbot of Fountains, who, as has been related, at Clairvaux rested in peace. Among these brethren, I, Serlo, was sent forth, a man now decrepit, as you see, and worn out with old age. The place of our habitation at first was called Bernolfwic (al. Barnolfswet), which we called by a changed name—The Mount of St. Mary. We remained there for several years, suffering many discomforts of cold and hunger, partly because of the inclemency of the air and the ceaseless trouble of rain, partly because, the kingdom being in a turmoil, many a time our possessions were wasted by brigands. The site of our habitation therefore displeased us, and the abbey was reduced to a grange. And through the advice of our patron we migrated to another place, which is now called Kirkstall. In the 15th year of the Foundation of the Monastery of Fountains, on May 19th, we were sent out under the Abbot Alexander, twelve monks and ten lay brethren.”

The above is quoted in full to show the consistency in detail of the two accounts; how far it may be taken as an establishment of the truth of the facts related cannot be proved. The conclusion to which the similarity appears to point is as much that the accounts were the work of one hand, as that the events occurred at the dates and places which occur without discrepancy in either manuscript.

The “Narratio de Fundatione Fontanis Monasterii” is represented to have been written in 1207 by Hugh of Kirkstall. And as after 1210 there occurs a distinct change in the manner of presentment of the facts which appear in the Fundacio Abbathie de Kirkstall, it is tempting to deduce that the monk who wrote an account of the beginnings of the mother foundation at Fountains did not neglect the monastery which is connected with his name, and that it was the same man who has recorded for us the traditions (which doubtless are in many respects of great value) about the early history of both establishments. If this inference is to be accepted, it is not improbable that the traditions repeated in the account here published are of very considerable importance, as they deal with events which began only sixty-three years before the time of writing.

Owing to very considerable inconsistencies and obvious omissions, the following document cannot be regarded as furnishing a full and indisputable history; but it is not thereby to be asserted that the traditions embodied do not in reality present the main facts as they took place.

With regard to the settlement at Barnoldswick, it is remarkable that no grant has as yet been found to the monks as in residence at Barnoldswick. And with regard to the space of time spent at that place, it will be noted below that the monks arrived in 1147 and left in 1152, on each occasion on the 19th of May; also that they had stayed there "sex annis et amplius." The departure on the anniversary of the arrival awakens suspicions which the subsequent arithmetic does not remove.

The almost incredible load of debt with which the monastery is stated to have been burdened under the fifteenth abbot (though parallels may be found in accounts of other establishments), and the omission of particulars of the grants of rents, etc., which are referred to as already in the possession of the abbot and monks, call for explanation. Still, it is quite probable that subsequent investigations may provide evidence sufficient to elucidate the real history which appears to be embodied in this interesting record of the early traditions of Kirkstall Abbey.

On fo. 192 is this note, but whether it refers to the whole volume or not is doubtful:—"This bouke was ffounde wheras Thomas Folkyngham¹ did preserve it from bur(n)inge anno domine Elizabethe regine 37 primo Maij, 1595. Yt is an evell thinge that will do no gō'."

FOUNDATION OF THE ABBEY OF KIRKSTALL.

IT happened after the death of Henry King of England, son of William called "the Bastard," that there reigned in his stead Stephen of Blois¹ nephew of Henry on his sister's side. For he finding the soldiery in a riotous condition and the kingdom in a turmoil, assumed the diadem relying on the assistance of Henry Bishop of Winchester,² his brother.

Now there was in those days in the province of York a certain man of great possessions, and among the great folk of the kingdom most notable and most noteworthy, by name Henry de Lacy;³ and it fell out that he was sick for many days. The man grown penitent under the scourge of God, made a vow to the Lord that he would build an abbey of the Cistercian⁴ order in honour of the glorious Virgin and Mother of God, Mary. He recovered, and not unmindful of his vow straightway caused the abbot of Fountains⁵ to be summoned to him, laid before him his intention, described his vow, and assigned to him by donation solemnly made a certain vill, by name Barnoldswick⁶ with its

(4) In 1147 the Cistercian order spread rapidly. According to P. Leopoldus Janauschek (Originum Cist., 1877), this was the sixth establishment sent from Fountains, the two hundred and thirty-first foundation of the Cistercian order, and the sixth of the year 1147; in this year fifty-one establishments were founded, of which twenty-one were in England and Wales.

Now the said vill belonged to the fee of Hugh Bigod,¹ Earl of Norfolk, and the said Henry had held it by rendering to the earl annually five marks and one hawk a year old,² though for many years previous to this time he had ceased payment. The abbot took the gift offered from the hand of the man, not knowing the matter to be the subject of dispute, and sending brethren built humble offices according to the form of the order, and called the place by a new name "the Mount of St. Mary."³ So, the offices arranged according to custom, in the year of the Incarnation of our Lord one thousand one hundred and forty-seven, there was ordained abbot of the same place the venerable man the lord Alexander,⁴ prior of Fountains, who on that very day, namely, May 19th,⁵ was despatched from the abbey of Fountains with twelve monks and ten lay brothers to the new abbey, which was called the Mount of Saint Mary. At that time the Archbishop of York was Henry Murdac, of good memory, once abbot of Fountains, who with episcopal authority granted and confirmed the place itself with its appurtenances, and the church of the same place free and quit and delivered of every claim to the monks there serving God. Moreover there was a church at Barnoldswick, very ancient and founded long before, with four the said monks were by this time in inhabitants. On feast days the parishioners met at the church with the priest and clerks according to custom, and became a nuisance to the monastery and the brethren there residing. Desiring therefore to provide for the peace and quiet of the monks, the abbot it may be with some want of consideration, pulled the church down to its foundations, in the face of the protests of clerks and parishioners. And so no small controversy arose concerning such an unusual and highhanded proceeding.

 For the clerk who was rector and parson of the church, bearing this destruction hardly, brought the abbot and monks into court before the metropolitan; when at length the parties appeared before the archbishop, thereupon appeal was made thence to the Apostolic See. And there in the presence of the Lord Pope the matter was brought to an issue in favour of the monks, and silence laid upon the opposing party, for the reason that it appeared a pious thing and worthy of favour, that a church should fall provided an abbey be constructed in its stead, so that the less good should yield to the greater, and that the case be gained by that party which would bring forth richer fruits of piety. So, peace brethren applied themselves to the profit of the monastery in greater quiet; yet even so were they troubled by a double discomfort, for freebooters, it being time of war, would often carry off their effects, and a plague of rains continuing well-nigh all the year overwhelmed their crops. For six years¹ and more they remained there in unbroken poverty and lack of food and clothing. Perceiving the situation of their settlement to be little fit for building a monastery, the abbot began to turn over in his mind the possibility of a change of site² and transference of the monastery elsewhere. And it chanced at a certain time that while acting again on the business of his house, he passed through a certain valley, then wooded and shady (the name of the valley was Airedale, that is, the valley of a river called the Aire); and he found in the level parts of the same valley certain brethren in religious garb leading a hermit's life.³ Delighted with the pleasantness of the spot, he turned aside to question them about their manner of life, and the form of their religion, whence they came there, or who had bestowed on them that place for their habitation. And one of them answered him, whose name was Seleth⁴ and he as it were a master among them. "Born in the southern part of this kingdom," he said, "I came hither upon a revelation from heaven. For when I was in the land of my birth, a voice came to me in my sleep, saying thrice, 'Arise, Seleth, and go into the province of York, and seek diligently in the valley which is called Airedale for a certain spot named Kirkstall.'⁵ For there wilt thou provide a habitation which shall be for the brethren for serving my Son.' 'And do thou,' I said, 'tell me I pray who is thy son whom we must serve?' 'I am Mary, and my son is called Jesus of Nazareth the Saviour of the world.' Waking I pondered with myself concerning the revelation given as to what I should do, and casting my hope on the Lord left my home and my home folk without delay, and took up my journey, and directed by her who called me, I came not without difficulty to this valley which you see. Here then I first learnt from herdsmen of cattle that this place in which we now live was called Kirkstall. I was alone many days living on roots and herbs and alms which neighbouring Christians ministered to me at the bidding of charity. Afterwards there joined me these brethren whom you now see, holding me for their rule and master. We live a life in common according to the form of the brethren of Leruth,¹ owning nothing individually, and seeking food and clothing by the labour of our hands." Upon hearing these things the abbot began to ponder in his mind concerning the site of the place and its conditions, the pleasant character of the valley and the river there flowing past, and the woods adjacent as being suitable for the erection of workshops. And it seemed to him that the place was fair enough and fit for building an abbey upon it. He began then gently to admonish the brethren about the health and progress of their souls, putting before them the danger of their individual wills, the small number of the brethren, that they were disciples without a master, laymen without a priest, calling them to a greater perfection and a better form of religion. Then bidding farewell to the brethren he departed to Henry de Lacy, founder of the monastery. Received by him with due honour he plies him about the matters of his house, the poverty of his brethren and the inconvenience of the place, describing the different troubles and annoyances, adding that he had found a spot very suitable and pleasant, and that it was easily possible for that property to come into his lordship. Now the knight who was lord of that estate¹ was called William Peytvin. So common counsel was taken by the abbot and the founder how the affair might be carried most easily and quickly into effect. In pursuance of which the abbot calling the hermits together, drew some to himself to be incorporated in the order; others took money and yielded him their right and habitation. While Henry de Lacy summoning William Peytvin gained his assent, and a strife and quarrel that had existed between them being laid to rest, on that day did they become friends. So William Peytvin at the instance of Henry conferred on God and the monks the said abode of the hermits, with water and wood lying near, by metes and certain bounds, and confirmed the same by his charter for them to hold for ever, but at an annual rent of (2) marks to be paid to himself and his heirs. The abbot therefore assured of a site where the place was more suitable, erected a basilica in honour of the Mother of God the ever Virgin Mary, and having arranged humble offices according to order called his monastery by a changed name, Kirkstall.³

In the year of our Lord's Incarnation,¹ 1152, King Stephen reigning over England, Archbishop Roger presiding over the see of York, on May 19th, the very day of the Virgin Potentiana, came the convent of monks from their first seat (now reduced to a grange) to the place which is now called Kirkstall; a place covered with woods and unproductive of crops, a place well nigh destitute of good things save timber and stone and a pleasant valley with the water of a river which flowed down its centre. Furthermore, that water divided the boundaries of the fee of William Peytvin and that of William de Reinwill. The monks abiding on the northern side of the river held no possessions on the south bank. But by the favour of the Lord and the acquisition of the abbot they straightway obtained the land from the centre of the river as far as the slope of the hill by certain metes and bounds. So taking their axe in hand they felled the woods and broke up their fallow ground; like the sons of Ephraim² they made unto themselves a place for a habitation, and reducing the thick bush to cultivation brought the niggard soil to grow rich with flourishing crops. And the Lord saw their labours and blessed them, and they were multiplied in a short while in the number of the brethren and the tale of their possessions. For the abbot being a man of piety and prudence watched with unwearying sagacity over the progress of his house in every direction, and increased it as far as possible with just claims. And throughout Henry de Lacy founder of the monastery stood by him, now providing the fruits of harvest, now supplying money as the needs of the establishment required. He had part in providing the buildings, laid with his own hand the foundations of the church, and himself completed the whole fabric at his own cost. Meanwhile a dispute arose concerning the grange of Barnoldswick. For the Earl of Norfolk, Hugh surnamed Bigod, claimed it for his own domain, won it for himself in the court of the lord king, and caused the monks to be dispossessed by the judgment of the court through default of warranty. Overwhelmed by the loss of his own possessions the abbot approached the earl and falling prone at his feet stirred the man to pity. At length an agreement was made between them that they should by gift of the earl take possession of the grange with its appurtenances to hold it of him and his heirs in perpetual alms on the annual payment of the ancient rent, namely five marks or a palfrey of equal value, and one hawk. But as to this annual rent King Henry of good memory wrought that it be removed, diligently striving and persuading the earl that for the redemption of his sins he should confer the said grange with its appurtenances upon God and the monks in pure and perpetual alms. And this was done as the charter¹ of the said earl witnesses, and likewise the confirmation of the king that they have relating to it, but on the condition that all his days they should pay him this annual tribute, and after his death be free from all payment and quit for ever. So the abbot returned to his own house with the charter of the earl and the confirmation of the king, and these matters being favourably settled the Lord was blessed in all his gifts. And the house was increased in his days in herds and pastures, in lands and

In those days the buildings of Kirkstall were erected of stone and wood brought there, that is, the church and either dormitory of the monks to wit, and of the lay brethren, and either refectory, the cloister, and the chapter and other offices necessary within the abbey, and all these covered excellently with tiles. The offices of the granges the abbot himself arranged, and ordained everything both outside and inside with wisdom. So diligently did he guard the ample woods that he had acquired under the favour of God for the benefit of those who were to follow him, that from them he took no material for building, but brought all together from other sources. For thirty and five years did he preside over the abbey of Kirkstall, a true abbot in deed and name, and being fulfilled in a good old age, an old man and full of years, he was gathered to his fathers. There succeeded him a venerable man, the lord Ralph surnamed Hageth, first a monk of Fountains afterwards abbot at the same place, a man of piety and noteworthy for all holiness, a lover of justice and most ardent in rivalry for the good of the order. Created abbot he began to do many things according to his ability, with a good will indeed, but considering too little the narrowness of their possessions and that small means cannot be stretched very far. He found an establishment which though not very wealthy was unhampered by debts, faring prosperously according to its means with prospects of vigour in the future, if he did not lack prudence. The man did not lack temptation in his administration, God it seems so disposing that he should learn in small matters the true way to conduct business in greater. For there beset him many tribulations, quarrels without, fears within, mortality of herds, dispersion of goods, want of household necessities, and failure of produce. In those days the grange of Micklethwaite was taken from them, and this was the monastery's greatest and best source of support. For King Henry being ill-advised by his counsellors, to spite Roger de Vmbray¹ had them dispossessed, because the said grange was of his fee, and he had given the same grange with its appurtenances and the whole fee of Collingham² and Bardsey, to Adam de Brus in exchange for the castle of Danby which the said king had taken away from him before. So there arose no small a disturbance among the brethren. Certain men taking a view of the various events according to the bias of their minds, threw the onus of all the evil chances and all the misfortune of the house upon the abbot, ascribing to him both the loss of the grange and the removal of certain sacred vessels, to wit a golden chalice and the text of the gospels which he himself had given with good intention to gain him the favour of the king and to recover the grange. But against all these attacks upon him he bore up, his conscience clear, his mind at rest, and with the weapon of a stronger faith he baffled the assaults of adverse fortune. At length the monks, dispersing, were distributed among the neighbouring houses of the order, partly because of stress of poverty, yet above all because thus they hoped to turn the heart of the prince to pity, but even this in vain. For the heart of the king was hardened, for with ever-vain promises he protracted the business until being snatched¹ from the midst he both cut off all hope from the abbot and from himself the power of showing pity. So the abbot returning home placed reliance on the counsels of the brethren, modifying expenses according to the exigencies of affairs, administered the cure of his house with enhanced attention. Nine years² did he stop at Kirkstall ever struggling against the discomforts of poverty, then transferred under happy auspices he took up the administration of the church at Fountains.

There followed him Abbot Lambert, a man of supreme innocence and singleness of mind, himself being one of those who were sent from Fountains under Abbot Alexander. Having passed forty-two¹ years in religious life, he took no steps whatever in the administration of outside affairs, but ever living a cloistered life he sat with Mary at the feet of the Lord to hear His word. Appointed abbot he made no disposition on his own initiative with regard to outside affairs, but committing all to the care of God relied on the counsels of the brethren, and the Lord was with him. In his days there was peace among the brethren, harmony with neighbours, a sufficiency in temporal things, in things spiritual a holy rivalry of religion; at the same time that there should not be lacking temptation to the man for his wellbeing it happened that a certain knight, Richard de Eland² by name, claimed for himself the grange of Cliviger with its pasturage. And the abbot finding that the knight's claim was just, resigned the same grange to his patron Robert de Lacy³ upon the gift of the vill of Accrington in exchange; having removed the inhabitants he reduced this vill to a grange, which would have served the uses of the monastery if he had held it in peace, but certain malignants living in the neighbourhood whose ancestors had held Accrington before, at the instigation of the Devil utterly burnt up the same grange with all its furniture and cruelly slew three lay brothers⁴ who were managing the grange, namely, Norman, Humphrey, and Robert. Stricken with sorrow at this evil chance the abbot consigned the dead men's souls to God, their bodies to burial, and seeking out

Robert de Lacy, patron of his house, to him entrusted his cause with tears. That noble man enraged at such presumption proceeded against those malefactors, and forced both them and all their kin to take to flight, until cowering at the knees of the abbot by the leave of the lord Robert de Lacy, they made satisfaction to God and the brethren for so monstrous a crime. Of the grange itself also on their oath they forswore possession for themselves and their successors, granting whatsoever right they had in it to God and the monks, and gave moreover money in requital of the losses they had caused them. So peace was made with the adversaries, and the abbot rebuilt the grange which had been ruined, and was fulfilled alike in all things, and died in a good old age and the third year of his stewardship.

Abbot Lambert being dead was succeeded by Abbot Turgisius of holy memory, a man of noteworthy self-restraint, sternest mortifier of his body, who ever wrapped in a hairshirt chastised the unlawful lusts of the flesh by the roughness of his garment, repeating in his action that verse of the gospel, "They that wear soft clothing are in kings' houses." One hood and one tunic alone, with never an addition, formed his clothing at all times. No more did he wear in winter, no less in summer. So unyielding did he show himself at either season that you would think he did not shiver at cold nor sweat (in the dog-days). In the midst of winter when the bitterness of frost nipped the most savagely, he provided no comforts to meet the cruelty of the cold, allowed no foot-gear as is wont for his feet, no straw to be laid under his hose. So he stood at vigils while we, clad in double garments were well-nigh frozen and numbed, as though he felt no discomfort, and fortifying himself with divine words of praise beat back the inclemency of the season by the fervour of the inner man. No man more agreeable than he, none more temperate; he did wholly abstain from wine except in those regions where no other beverage could be found, while as to meat no need to question. Fish he would allow for the sake of those sitting next to him to be put on the table; offered to his sight alone, to his lips by no manner of means. In weeping and penitence unceasing, in converse scarcely at times would he refrain from tears, at the office of the altar he stood to celebrate never without devotion, never without tears, and so great was the flood of them that he seemed less to weep than to pour them down like rain, so much so that hardly could anyone else in offering the Mass have used the priestly vestments with which he was robed. He passed nine years at Kirkstall, and returning to Fountains in the consummation of a good ending rested in peace.

There succeeded him Abbot Helias of good memory, once monk of Roche: a man of energy, fully practised in dealing with outside affairs, who when he had taken up the duties of administration took sufficient action for the place and time; he brought together things scattered, he conserved what was collected, and the Lord was with him. Nor was a trial wanting in the first days of his appointment. For the noble man, Roger de Lacy, albeit patron of the monastery, being ill-advised by certain men conceived so great a dislike to the said abbot that he did not deign even to set eyes on the man or allow him into his presence¹; but the Lord, in whose hands are the hearts of princes and their counsels, softened his feelings and turned his hatred into the fulness of favour and love. For afterwards he both made the abbot his familiar and private friend, and in no moderate manner promoted the affairs of his house. So the abbot, by the grace of God and relying on His assistance, approached King John about the grange of Micklethwaite that King Henry his father had before taken from the monks. Assistance to his part was provided by Roger¹ de Lacy, constable of Chester, and all the high officers of the court who were his friends, but the king would in no way agree to grant the grange unless he was willing to hold at a fee-farm rent the manor which included it in its appurtenances. Induced then by this necessity he took the said grange with the manors of Collingham and Bardsey at a fee-farm rent from the hand of the king, at an annual payment that is of 90 pounds², as the king's³ charter witnesses. In his days were added to the monastery of Kirkstall the soke of Adel⁴ and the vill of Allerton that is half a knight's fee, with certain other places. In his time was lost the grange of Hooton by force of King John,⁵ and the land of Thorp was granted to a certain Laurence clerk of Wyton.⁶

There succeeded him Ralph of Newcastle,⁷ who died in the time of King Henry on April 6th.

Grimeston as abbot on the day of Saint Lambert bishop and martyr (Sept. 17th) in the year of our Lord 1284.¹ In the first place draught oxen 16, cows 83, yearlings and young bullocks 16, asses 21, sheep none.² Debts owed without question by the acknowledgments made before the barons of the exchequer, £4,402 21s. 7d. besides scrip in the hands of the company of James of Pistokis for 500 marks and one scrip of 500 marks de Judaismo³ in the hands of the abbot of Fountains⁴ and besides 5 sacks of wool⁵ and 9 marks owed to Bernard Talde, and besides quittances in the hands of John Saylbes for 340 marks. In witness whereof we, brother Henry, styled abbot of Fountains, have put our seal. The sum of all debts is £5,248 15s. 7d.⁶ besides five sacks of wool.

Brother Hugh, styled abbot of Kirkstall, to the convent of the same house beloved of him in Christ, greeting and blessing in the bond of peace. The difficulties respecting Simon having been brought to an end at the time of the general chapter, on a doubtful errand with sad and bitter spirit—as our beloved brother and son, brother John of Bridesale will be able to tell you—we took up our journey towards Gascony the day after

(1) In 1284 average value of a bull was 10s. 6d., of oxen 11s., of a cow 6s. 4d., of a stott (draught horse) 9s. 11d., of muttons 1s. 0½d.—Th: Rogers' Agriculture and Prices, i. chap. 16.

(2) A drought is said to have occurred in 1284 (Ibid). Absence of sheep, perhaps due to the practice of killing all sheep that could not be kept over winter, because winter roots and artificial grasses were unknown (ib. i., chap. 3). Moreover the scab first appeared in the year 1280. (Th: Rogers, Six Centuries of Work and Wages, chap. iii.) Some comment appears necessary, for in 1224 the abbot of Kirkstall was granted leave to load one ship with wool, and despatch wherever he wished. Rot. Lit. (5) Th: Rogers' Agriculture and Prices, i. chap. 17, estimates one sack of wool = 52 cloves (7 lb.) at 2s. 0½d. per clove = £5 6s. 2d.

(6) £5,248 15s. 7d. Above the debt is detailed as £4,402 21s. 7d. and scrip for 500 marks; another scrip for 500 marks and 9 marks, and 340 marks and 5 sacks of wool, which should bring up the total to £5,302 8s. 3d. Dugdale's figures are not the same as above. Kirkstall Abbey appears to have been heavily in debt before, cf. in 1189 to Aaron the Jew of Lincoln. Charter of Richard I. quoted in Surtees Society Memorials of Fountains, ii., p. 18. The sum named above seems incredible; and it is remarkable that by 1261 (only seventeen years later) the debts were reduced to £160 (vide p. 203). There are several points in the above "status" which require further elucidation.

St. Lambert's day (September 18th). But experiencing manifold obstacles, only on St. Edward's day (October 13) and with great difficulty did we first find the lord king at Saint Sever¹ in the depths of Gascony, partly because of the unexpected length of the journey, partly because of the well-known poverty of Burgundy and the wretched condition of the lands which we passed by water² not by road, partly on account of a quartan fever that brought us to despair, and so far weakened us that those who saw us had no hope for our life. But blessed be the heavenly Physician there now remains some hope, small though it be. In which place indeed among other nobles we found our lord the Earl of Lincoln present with the lord king. To him we explained in full to the best of our understanding the reason of our coming and the difficulties of our house, and he moved with pity bestowed on us counsel and help to the best of his knowledge and power and (? preferred) our petition which ran as follows:—"The abbot and convent of Kirkstall are suppliants to the king's pity that saving their own moderate sustenance their lands and tenements be valued, that debts due to diverse creditors be paid according to proportion from the same valuation, that their house aforesaid be not wholly razed to the ground, but that with regard to their diverse creditors good faith according to their power be maintained; that Collingham and Bardsey be not distrained upon for other debts, saving the yearly fee-farm rent of the lord king." The earl received the petition and presented it first in the common council of the king, next in the secret council, lastly persevering greatly laid it before the lord king. And at his

Quo audito per os comitis istud nobis nunciantis desperatione et tristitia replebamur in tantum quod hijs et alijs negocijs totaliter omissis, si pro corporali infirmitate potuissemus a Curia regis versus quas partes ignorabamus recessisse proposuimus, set febre quartana nos incarcerante et vt verius fateamur altissimo disponente nos et frater Adam socius in tribulacione ad cor reuertentes supplicauimus domino nostro comiti predicto qui pro statu nostro multum dolens fuit vt nobis gratiam et licenciam impetraret cameram domini regis instigation the lord king made a conuocation of all his counsellors. Our petition was heard, the multitude of our debts was explained, the smallness of the valuation of our lands and tenements was viewed, the great number of monks and lay brothers and others who are accommodated in our house was given, the complete admission of the debts of the same to the exchequer of the lord king was brought under notice; whereat it seemed to the lord king and all who were on his council that our petition did not admit of consideration because from the valuation of our lands, as they said, when all the aforesaid had been reckoned we should not be able to live or within one hundred years to satisfy our various creditors from the residue; and also if our said petition about Collingham and Bardsey had gained a successful hearing, as they said, in that case we should have the power to make a camp and to set up an array against the equity of the law of the same barony and put there in retirement, whatsoever happened, all our beasts; and for this reason the king said that he would provide no remedy in the aforesaid matters, nor would he yield to one party so great a favour as would cause him to do injury to another party.

Upon hearing this through the mouth of the earl who brought us this news we were filled with despair and sorrow, insomuch that this and other business put wholly aside, we proposed to ourselves to retire from the king's court to regions that we knew not, had we been able for bodily weakness, but a quartan fever held us in ward, and to confess the truth the Most High ordering it thus we and brother Adam our ally in tribulation taking heart again, supplicated our lord the aforesaid earl who was in great grief at our condition, to gain favour for us and licence to enter the king's chamber and to speak with the king in person, which thing indeed was granted with great difficulty and brought about. So we with our said ally came into the presence of the lord king, but what we said and in what manner we put before him our business we cannot at present write to you, but on another occasion we will tell you if it shall please God that we shall see your faces again in this light of day. But blessed be God we found such grace in his sight that against the opinion of the counsellors of his own special favour, he granted us two writs which he was unable to grant by law of the king's court, the tenor of which we send you herein first of one, afterward of the other.

"Edward by the grace of God, etc., to the treasurer and to the barons of the exchequer greeting. Whereas our beloved in Christ the abbot and convent of Kirkstall hold of us the manors of Collingham and Bardsey in the county of York in fee-farm at a rent of ninety pounds to our treasury, we charge you that you in no way allow distraint for a debt or debts to be put into force on the same manors within the sum of the said farm. Witness, etc."

"Edward, etc., to the venerable father in Christ, John, by the same grace bishop of Ely his treasurer, greeting. The abbot and convent of Kirkstall have demonstrated to us by their complaint that their said house, from diverse reasons and agreements through the ignorance or simple-mindedness of certain former abbots of the same house, is so far loaded with debts, and harassed through the exactions of creditors that they cannot maintain themselves on the property of that house, and are constrained to disperse the monks and brethren of the same and transfer them to foreign places. And because we have much pity for the poverty and depressed condition of the same house and wish satisfactory provision to be made for their relief, we command you mandamus rogantes quatinus intellectis nominibus creditorum dictorum abbatis et conuentus que vobis facient creditores ipsos modis quibus magis expedire videritis curialiter inducatis vt eisdem abbati et conuentui terminos rationabiles concedant ad quos debita illa eis soluere valeant competenter sustentacione mediocriter sibi salua. Et si forsan abbas et conuentus predicti requirant quod terre et tenementa sua quantum valeant per annum in omnibus exitibus extendantur et quod exitus illi sustentacione deducta creditoribus illis secundum quantitatem debiti quod singulis debetur particulariter assignentur donec eisdem creditoribus de debitis suis plenarie fuerit satisfactum tunc si creditores ipsi ad hoc consenciant idem fieri faciat. Si vero ijdem abbas et conuentus ad maiorem releuacionem domus eiusdem proteccionem nostra indiguerint proteccionem huiusmodi sub sigillo quo in Anglia vtimur qualem sibi competere videritis in hac parte faciat habere eisdem. Teste me ipso apud Sanctum Seuerum xvj^{mo} die Octobris anno regni nostri xv°.

bidding that having learnt the names of the creditors of the said abbot and convent which they shall make known to you, you shall consistently with the law in whatever way you shall see to be most expedient, induce the same creditors to allow the said abbot and convent reasonable terms at which they shall be able to pay them those debts adequately, retaining at the same time for themselves a moderate means of sustenance. And if perchance the abbot and convent aforesaid require that their lands and tenements be valued as to their yearly income from all sources, and that such revenue, after deducting their means of support, be assigned to those creditors according to the amount of debt which is owed to each, until there shall have been made full satisfaction to the same creditors for their debts, then if the creditors themselves agree to this you shall cause it to be carried into effect. If however the same abbot and convent shall stand in need of our protection for the greater relief of their house, upon this you shall cause protection to be afforded them in this particular of such sort as you shall see is sufficient for them, acting under the seal that we use in England. Witness myself at Saint Sever, October 16th, the 15th year of our reign (1287)."

And to cause the same lord treasurer to execute faithfully the said two writs with the desired effect, we have letters of request from bishops, earls, barons and all counsellors of the king there residing such as we knew were ordinarily to be delivered to the same treasurer. But whereas the court of the lord king declined to interfere with the debt to the cardinal, neither although we had many supporters were we enabled to gain favour in connection with the debt to Tockes¹ the Jew of London, still, aided by the advocacy of your prayers and using the best devices of our own humble judgment, we think we have found an adequate remedy in the face of the danger from the said debts, which involved either the temporary or even the perpetual ruin of our house; to wit, when there was laid before the lord Earl of Lincoln and his council an account of our lands of Blackburnshire besides Exwhistle [?] and of Roundhay and of our other rents in Shadwell and Seacroft, it was found by a faithful reckoning that all the lands and the aforesaid rents, with the addition of four pounds annually which we have received for different matters during some years from the exchequer of Pontefract,¹ and deducting what reasonably should be deducted, are worth no more than £41 7s. 9d. sterling, and that so much annual rent can be bought according to the ordinary rate of purchase for £413 17s. 6d. No more need be said. Blessed be God, in the above-mentioned there is neither buying nor selling but an exchange² wrought by the right hand of the Most High. So that instead of the aforesaid 41 pounds 7 shillings and 9 pence of yearly rent of which we had no certainty and which we did not actually realize (because up to the present time there has been no account nor audit which actually proved that yearly we have realised clear so much from the aforesaid when all has been reckoned up) instead of the above we shall receive 80³ marks sterling annually on a secure Take basis, that is from the exchequer of notice

Pontefract for ever; one of the best conditions possible being added, that the said earl shall pay to us for the cancelling and erasing of the debt due to the said cardinal and the Jew at the terms agreed upon between us, 350 pounds¹ sterling in hand under pain of incurring the burden of all our losses, all, that is, that we shall incur at the hands of the said two creditors on account of the default of the said money unpaid at the terms agreed upon. And in this manner the said earl purchases at a sufficiently good rate 35 pounds of our annual rent out of the 41 pounds 7 shillings and 9 pence mentioned before of annual rent. From which consequently instead of 6 pounds 7 shillings and 9 pence annually, being the remainder of the sum above named, we shall receive at settled terms 80² marks annually for ever. So all is well that ends well,³ according to Roger Wysman de Semer. But as to the manner in which the said earl was moved by pity in the aforesaid towards us, and as to the reasons which won him over, or as to the mode by which he was impelled to grant much for little, we do not dare to write openly lest by chance some who hear may, etc. But lest we be deceived in any point of the aforesaid a record of the obligations which we hold in our hands with regard to the said money to be paid to us in hand, is inscribed in the rolls of the chancery of the lord king. Likewise also the agreement completed between us in the manner of a chirograph is enrolled, which agreement indeed is ratified and confirmed by a royal confirmation which we hold in our hands. Of all these documents we send you a

(1) Whitaker says 350 marks.

(2) Eighty marks per annum (£53 6s. 8d.) seems a very generous return for rents valued at £41 7s. 9d. The annual payment of fifty marks is delayed until 1293, of 30 marks until 1298. This deferment of 550 marks may be considered as the equivalent for payment of the debt of 350 pounds mentioned above.

A certain bond. "To all the faithful of Christ to whose notice the present writing shall come, Henry de Lacy, Earl of Lincoln and Constable of Chester, greeting in the Lord to everlasting. Know ye that we are held and bound to the abbot and convent of Kirkstall of the Cistercian order in the diocese of York, in a hundred and fifty pounds sterling new money to be paid to the same at their house of Kirkstall aforesaid on Sunday in the middle of Lent¹ in the year of our Lord 1287 without further delay for the terms of the first five years, for the lands, tenements, and rents in Accrington, Cliviger, and Huncoat, in the county of Lancaster. And if it happen, which God forbid, that the said abbot and convent incur loss or annoyances owing to the default of the said money being unpaid on the day and at the place above noted, we bind ourselves and our heirs (if the common lot of man befall us) to make good to the same abbot and convent the losses and annoyances which they shall be reasonably able to show that they have sustained or incurred on account of the default, should it occur. In testimony of which we have put our seal to the present writing. Given and done at Saint Sever on the day of the Holy Apostles Simon and Jude (Oct. 28th) in the year above noted. These things moreover we acknowledged before the lord king and procured that they be enrolled in the rolls of his chancery."

And those things that you are not able to remove you must deliver in peace, because the lord earl at our instance has instructed the lord Richard de [Salvin?] by his letters, which we send by the bearer of the present to you, that he buy at a just price those things which you wish to sell in his bailywick, and without prejudice to his seisin, that he do favour to you in every manner in the matter of those moveables which we shall not be able to remove without loss; in which letter moreover is contained provision that we hold in peace our land of²Horton

St. Lawrence (Aug. 11th) full menacing, how we were informed that robbers awaited us in the woods near Roche; how we were stricken at the forfeiture of everything because we had been able to look for the goodwill of the lord king, our most beloved brother knows, who has seen these things. Retiring however with honour from the presence of the lord king on the fifth day about the sixth hour, and being appointed messenger of the same lord concerning certain businesses, we took up our journey and came through prosperously to Dover on Monday at night, our delay in London notwithstanding, with comfort alike to our servants and horses. We hope therefore that our feeble beginning will be followed up by better fortune. For on Thursday morning we have entrusted our horses on board ship, the wind blowing fair. Of a surety, dearest brethren, I recommend you to God and myself to your prayers. But pray for the well-being of my soul. For we do not care much if the clay of our body be delivered into the hands of the wicked one, if only our spirit be safe in the day of the Lord, which we hope for assisted by your prayers; still we should wish, if it should please God, to be buried by your hands where you shall have determined. Know however for certain that if we do return, whosoever shall have been most humble in your common life, most active in work up to our return, he, receiving greater grace and reward from God shall also be dearer to us and more beloved at all times: we enjoin and pray brother Richard Ekelerlay that he prepare himself to preach on Christmas day, unless we return before that time, so that that great festival may not pass without a sermon, which never has happened, nor by the grace of God shall ever occur in future. Paulinus de Leeds.

BY RICHARD HOLMES.

PAULINUS DE LEEDS was a noted ecclesiastic of the twelfth century, and as it appears that but little is generally known concerning him in his adopted town, of which he was the Vicar for nearly forty years, I am glad of the opportunity of placing upon record there what I have ascertained with respect to one who during so great a part of his life occupied a distinguished position, arising firstly from his birth as son of an influential bishop; secondly as master of St. Leonard's (formerly St. Peter's) Hospital, York; and finally as vicar of Leeds; whose history, moreover, and that of his family, are in many points fairly illustrative of their time.

In opening I would point out that his surname, "of Leeds," was personal, not hereditary; that he neither had the name from his father, nor did he transmit it to his son; and that, moreover, he was no connection of that younger brother of Adam Fitz-Peter Fitz-Asolf, who, marrying the eldest sister of his brother's wife, received from that brother's bounty a large grant of lands in Leeds, which in the next century and in a generation after the time of Paulinus, led to the foundation of the family of "de Leeds" as a manorial title. That family of "de Leeds" lasted for several generations; and their genealogy (which has nothing, as I have said, to do with that of Paulinus) is on record in Glover's Visitation of 1584. Such being clearly the case, let us enquire how Paulinus had previously come to be known as "de Leeds."

Surnames, such as "de Leeds," derived from the names of places, are of three classes:—

(1) Those in which the word is simply descriptive, answering in a great degree to the modern "address." And in the twelfth century, when the system was being adopted, a large owner would have many such descriptive "addresses," either of which he would use according to circumstances. For instance, Adam de Birkin was also known as Adam de Shitlington, Adam de Falthwaite, and Adam de Midgley; and would call himself "of" the place with the interests in which he was specially dealing. A knowledge of this fact clears up many apparent ambiguities.

(2) Those in which the head of the family was the owner of the whole manor, or of some considerable portion of it, and who had perhaps little beyond his own manor.

(3) Those in which a man of lower grade, who had left his native place, was called from it, not because he had property there, but because he was born there.

(4) Those in which, as in the case of Paulinus de Leeds, it denoted the parson of a church; and a glance through Archbishop Gray's Register (Surtees Society) will show how considerable had become the number of such rectors or vicars, who in the middle of the thirteenth century were called after the churches they served. It will not be difficult to ascertain that it was to the last of these classes that the name "de Leeds" as used by Paulinus belonged.

But to begin with his early life. He was the son of one Ralph Noel or Nuel, a name Latinized as Nouellus or Novellus, meaning in its original form Christmas, but converted into such a Latinism as might induce the belief that it signified "something new." His father was the consecrated bishop of the Orkneys, but through a defect in his title, notwithstanding the efforts on his behalf of both Calistus II. (1119-1124) and Honorius II. (1124-1130)—see Mon. Ang. vi. 1186, for the letters of these Pöpes in his favour, to Aistan and Siward, kings of Norway—he found himself in the later and more distracted times of Henry I. a bishop without a mission, very much as St. William was, some quarter of a century afterwards. Accepting the position—he could do no less—he acted as assistant or curate-bishop, sometimes for the bishop of Durham, sometimes for the archbishop of York. Thus the word suffragan, which has been applied to him, incorrectly describes his status and his anomalous position. For the fact was that previous to his time there had been two successions of Orkney bishops; one receiving consecration from and owing obedience to the archbishops of York, the other subordinate to Hamburg. Of the former line were—

(1) Rodolph, consecrated at York on 3rd March, 1077, by archbishop Thomas of Bayeux and the bishops of Worcester and Dorchester (the then seat of the bishop of Lincoln).

(2) Roger, consecrated by archbishop Gerard.

(3) Ralph Noel, consecrated in York Cathedral by Thomas II. (c. 1111) in whom the succession terminated.

The schism, as it may be called (and it really amounted to such), was afterwards healed, and the Orkneys being withdrawn from both York and Hamburg, were subordinated to Drontheim by the influence of the Papal legate of Eugenius III., one Nicholas Breakspear, an Englishman, the apostle of Norway, and afterwards Pope under the title of Adrian IV. (1154-1159); indeed the only Englishman who ever became Pope.

Ralph Noel must have been, for a full generation, an important ecclesiastic in this northern province, for his episcopal orders raised him from the ranks. And accordingly we find him, in 1123, as indeed "Episcopus Orcadum,"—for he did not always renounce his title, especially in those early days—engaged in receiving the resignation of Hugh de Lascy, abbot of Selby, who could hardly have resigned on account of the incapacity which cometh of age, but who probably, in some way, felt the effect of the final deprivation, a few months previously, of his elder brother Robert (see Coucher Book of Selby, vol. i., p. [24]).

Fifteen years afterwards, in 1138, at the time of the Battle of the Standard, as we learn from the contemporary John of Hexham, he (by a singular irony, nominal Bishop of the Orkneys) did what he could, in the place of the feeble Archbishop, Thurstan, to enliven and strengthen the courage of those who were banded together to resist the invading Scots. But Ralph Novellus seems never to have obtained more than a nominal position in the diocese to which he was consecrated, and the title of which he thus used; for the Orkneys became alienated more and more from the obedience to York, which was claimed by at least three prelates of that northern province, till the authoritative transference to Drontheim put an end to the York pretensions.

About the same time as he thus led the armies at Northallerton, or not long afterwards, Ralph Novellus headed the witnesses to an important agreement between the chapter at York and the monks of Pontefract, concerning the Fairburn half of Ledsham, the other witnesses being Nobel, abbot of Albamarle (sic); Ralph, archdeacon of Durham; Roger, prior of Durham; and Augustine, prior of Hod, or Hotham (the predecessor of Byland, and afterwards a cell to Guisborough, about which little seems to be known, the name being often confused with that of Howden; but see Mon. Ang. v. 343).

Six years later, in 1144, Ralph Noel was selected as one of the advocates of St. William, the archbishop-designate; and with Savaric, abbot of St. Mary's, York, and Benedict, abbot of Whitby, he appeared before the council at Winchester on behalf of the claimant archbishop; after which, their efforts being successful, William Fitz-Herbert was consecrated 26th September, 1144, by Henry, Bishop of Winchester, legate of the Pope, and brother of King Stephen. (I should add, by way of caution, that Ralph Novellus is sometimes confused with Ralph Flambard, Bishop of Durham, who died in 1133, but the two are easily differentiated. "Ran. Dunelm Episcopo," and "Radulpho Orcadum," are co-witnesses to a letter of David, King of Scots, given as No. 53 among the York documents in the Monasticon (vii. 1187); and Pope Calistus writes to him as one of the Scottish bishops (the others named are those of Durham and Glasgow) to render obedience to Thurstan, the newly-consecrated archbishop of York. So much for the father of Paulinus de Leeds, who (see Coucher Book of Selby, No. 510) lived well into the time of Henry de Lascy, say at least 1150.

Paulinus himself seems never to have used his father's surname; but (at least in all documents that I have seen) always called himself either Paulinus, Paulinus son of Ralph, Paulinus son of the bishop, Paulinus Medicus, Paulinus the Master; or in his later life, by a name taken from the town of which he had become vicar, Paulinus de Leeds.

Thus while comparatively a young man, and while moving in the high ecclesiastical society of York, like many of the clergy of the middle of the twelfth century he was not only "clericus" but "medicus." Indeed, the latter was his earlier title, and as "medicus" he tested a charter (Mon. Ang. vii. 609) from the Lady Gundred, wife of Nigel de Albini, and mother of Roger de Mowbray, the second husband of Alice de Gaunt; that sister of Gilbert de Gaunt who was widow of Ilbert de Lascy the younger. This charter (which Dodsworth quotes as from the original examined by him in St. Mary's Tower, York) concerned a grant of four bovates of land at Bagby, near Thirsk, "to God and St. Leonard, and to the poor of the hospital of St. Peter of York," the gift being for the soul of Gundred's husband, Nigel, who we may therefore conclude was then dead. The witnesses named, besides "many others not named," were thirteen, including the above Alice de Gaunt (aunt to Maurice, charter-lord of Leeds), and Paulinus medicus de Eboraco. As Alice de Gaunt was certainly married to Roger de Mowbray at least as early as 1148, we may be assured that this charter ante-dates that year; and that at some time, not long perhaps before, Paulinus was a simple "medicus," witnessing a charter to that hospital of which he was, a few years after, to become master. It may be noticed that both St. Peter and St. Leonard are named in this deed of grant as the title of dedication of the hospital; and I may observe that the hospital (standing as it did, after its re-foundation, in front of the west door of the cathedral) was originally called St. Peter's, but that it was subsequently named "St. Leonard's" from the dedication of its new church, which had been built in the time of King Stephen, years before Paulinus was the master, and dedicated by him to that eminent Confessor. Leland indeed says that King Stephen rebuilt the whole, and effected the migration, but he does not give his authority.

Paulinus succeeded to the mastership of the hospital, probably in January, 1155, when the new king (to whom, possibly under the Mowbray influence, his promotion may be attributed) visited York; and he was master of this wealthy foundation for about the first half of the reign of Henry II. As "master" he witnessed charter No. 86 (later than 1160), and No. 167 with No. 168 (all three in the Rievaulx Chartulary), nearly, if not quite, contemporary. There is, however, a charter to Hedley, a cell of Holy Trinity, of Adam Fitz-Peter, of Birkin, who inherited in 1165, by which the donor gave to that foundation five acres in Smeathalls (which was a piece of meadow land between Birkin and Byram, that was never treated as a separate manor), and the gift was witnessed, among others, by Paulinus de Leeds, and Robert de Gaunt, father of Maurice, the charter-giving lord of Leeds. This may be of any date after 1165 and before 1192, when Robert de Gaunt died; and till its date the subject of this memoir was known as Paulinus, Paulinus son of Ralph, Paulinus medicus, or master Paulinus—master of the hospital, that is; for it was not the University degree then coming into use, or Paulinus would not have ceased to use it after he had been promoted to Leeds.

The same Adam Fitz-Peter, who inherited in 1165, granted also a series of charters to the monks of Pontefract, and another to those of Rievaulx, to several of which the name of Paulinus is attached. In No. 327 P., Paulinus "the canon"—the only instance in which I have found him to be so called—is a witness that Robert of Newton (that is, Robert Wallis of Newton Wallis, near Castleford) had surrendered to the monks the claim which he had made to the meadow of Ledsham. This would have been certainly later than the time of the above-named Rievaulx charters, in which Paulinus is carefully placed after the signing canons. It was also later than 1166, in which year the Wallis fee was held by Henry Wallis, probably Robert's uncle, and when "Robert of Newton" was newly seated; for he was afterwards uniformly called Robert Wallis. This charter therefore does not help us much.

There is, however, another in the series, No. 324, from which we get some aid. This latter, which is somewhat later than No. 327, is copied into the Lansdowne MSS. No. 207A, and is the original of No. 322 P (Pontefract) which, embalming some slight errors, appears in the Monasticon as No. xxv. It is from Adam Fitz-Peter, and rehearses that for the love of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the good of his soul, and of those of Matilda his wife, his father, his mother, his ancestors and benefactors, and of all those who through his evil occasion shall do ill to any (qui causa mei mali quibus delinquent), he has given and granted, &c. It is witnessed among others by Paulinus, priest of Leeds , Peter the priest, Adam the priest his brother , Thomas brother of Paulinus , and others. Thus we have in it Paulinus at Leeds, and accompanied by those whom we shall find to be his three brothers. But it forwards us little with the chronology.

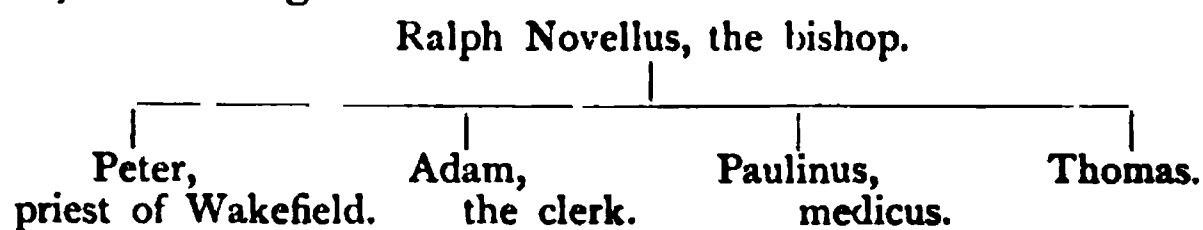

Adam's charters to Rievaulx, which laid the foundation of the great ironworks at Stainborough, were guarded with the special privilege that no other monastery should have a furnace in the manor. 74 R. is witnessed by Hugh, prior of Kirkstall, Ailsi, priest of Leeds, Adam his son, Henry de Lascy, and many others; and attached to it we have, I doubt not, the name of a predecessor to Paulinus in the vicarage of Leeds; one, moreover, who holds so important a position that his name precedes even that of Henry de Lascy, the lord of the fee. 74 R. thus gives an interval, it may be considerable, after 1165, during which the vicarage of Leeds was holden by a vicar earlier than Paulinus.

There is, however, another charter a little further on in the Rievaulx chartulary, No. 101, which is very much to our purpose. It is from Matthew, the son of Saxe, in his time almost as great a magnate as the overshadowing Asolf, who seems to have had so mighty an influence in the whole breadth of the county from Shitlington to Drax. This charter is witnessed by Adam Fitz-Peter (unfortunately printed Alan, though I have ascertained by inspection of the original in the Cottonian Library that my suspicion of the inaccuracy was justified); Roger his brother; Adam the clerk, brother of Peter of Wakefield; and Paulinus their brother. This is especially interesting, as giving not only the names of two brothers of Paulinus, but something special concerning each, and a half intimation that Paulinus, being named last, was the youngest of the three.

And now to revert to the charter of Hedley, which is similarly important as naming three brothers of Paulinus, including Thomas not named in the Rievaulx charter, as indicating why Ralph the bishop is mentioned so often in the Selby chartulary, and as evincing the possibility of our being on the track of the origin of a later Ralph Noel, of York, mentioned in the same chartulary, who had property at Rawcliffe, probably by descent from the bishop.

The witnesses to this charter of Adam Fitz-Peter number as many as seventeen, and include among others our Paulinus de Leeds; Peter and Adam his brothers; Robert de Gaunt, the father of Maurice; Thomas son of Peter, who as I have said was afterwards called de Leeds, and became head of a family there, but as yet had not the qualifying property, and therefore had not assumed the distinction; Robert son of Adam (de Midgley, that is, de Birkin; he was the eldest son, but his share of the large estate of Asolf was to the west of our longitude, and we know more of John the third son; he is named in a charter which granted an eighth of the town of Midgley to the monks of Pontefract); Jordan, son of Alexander (a Paganel, who may be traced on the accompanying pedigree as a younger brother of the William Paganel who gave large gifts to Nostell, and lands in Adel to Kirkstall, perhaps mainly from his share of that part of the Fossard property which he inherited through his mother);—[the two were sons of Alexander the youngest brother of William Paganel of the main line, and were therefore second cousins half removed to Maurice the lord, whose father was the second husband of the daughter of Alexander's eldest brother;] William son of Thomas (probably the above Thomas of Leeds) and Robert his brother; with finally Thomas, the third brother of Paulinus. And if, as I think we may, we consider these brothers to be such according to the flesh, and not merely brothers of the Hospital, this will set us on the search for links between one of them and the other "Ralph Noel of York," who, according to the Selby chartulary, as I have already indicated, had property at Rawcliffe. For without insisting on the order of seniority of the four brothers, this will give—

And either of the four might be father of the second Ralph Noel. The necessary information is, however, supplied by a charter of William de Stuteville to Hod (Mon. Ang., ii. 194), which is witnessed by Radulfus filius Paulini Eborascensis, who can be none other than our Paulinus de York, afterwards Paulinus de Leeds.

But to enquire as to the connection of these brothers with that Robert Noel and his son Thomas, who was a justiciary, and in 1185-89 sheriff of Staffordshire (where the family had had manors from the time of Domesday), each of whom is returned as a mesne holder in Liber Niger (133 and 138), would be beside our purpose. The connection could be but collateral.

Although the date of his birth cannot be fixed, or even approximated to, with anything like accuracy, Paulinus de Leeds must have been, in any case, a long-lived man; but though it appears on official record I cannot quite credit the statement, notwithstanding the apparent oath of altogether unexceptional witnesses, that he was master of St. Leonard's Hospital during some eighty years. Indeed, I believe the assertion to have been, to a very considerable degree, the result of a clerkly misunderstanding of the words of the verdict of the jury in the Placita de Juratis, of 30 Henry III. [1245]. This was the result of an enquiry by a jury of sixteen, "de antiquioribus et discretioribus militibus," whose names are given, which is transcribed at pp. 52-53 of the Chartulary of Guisborough (Surtees Society), and they appear to have put on record that he held the mastership of St. Leonard's from about 1122 to 1204. The document gives, as I have said, on oath, a traditional history of the house of St. Leonard, which bears upon its face that, "after the death of William the Conqueror," Paulinus, the chaplain and confessor of the "senior King Henry," was admitted master, at the king's request (which is interpreted to be at least before 1135, the year of the death of King Henry, who, after an interval, succeeded William the Conqueror); that he lived there, master, "for many years"; that, "after his death," Archbishop Geoffrey, "in the time of King John," that is, after 1199, when King John began his reign, illegally preferred to the mastership a certain John, his chaplain, who was removed by process on account of the illegality of his appointment; and that, after his removal, the legal patrons, the dean and chapter, appointed firstly Ralph de Nottingham, and on his decease Hugh de Geddington, who at the time of the Inquisition [1245] was the "last master."

Now those who reduced the verdict of this jury into words could not have observed the very large interval of time with which they were dealing. I have no doubt that this assize jury of the "more elderly and discreet knights" made what they knew to be a true return. But I have also no doubt that, either because they themselves or the clerk who reduced their return to writing did not understand its terms, the document was entirely erroneous on the point of the accession of Paulinus to the mastership; in fact, that the clerk misunderstood the application of the words "senior King Henry." This, owing to the use of the phrase "after the death of William the Conqueror," he applied by the terms of the verdict to Henry I.: but those who deposed to the facts must have intended the words to indicate Henry II., who was often so called, and would have been so called by those who were elderly men in 1245. For following their fathers, they knew the facts which would have been unknown to a younger generation, that his son Henry, afterwards styled the "younger king," was crowned as Henry III. on 14th June, 1170, when only fifteen years old, and for a second time on St. Bartholomew's day 1172, after his marriage. As "joint king" he reigned till his early death on St. Barnabas' day 1183 obliterated his pretension to the title he had used, which had not come to be a matter of record in the royal courts, for "the young king" had courts of his own. But during those thirteen years, and by contemporary historians down to the accession of Henry, son of John, he was always known as the "junior king." He would have been especially well known by that title to this Yorkshire jury of knights, who would have been particularly aware of the fact, since "the young King Henry" had appointed as his chancellor—for his courts were entirely independent of those of the king—a well-known Yorkshireman, Geoffrey, a nephew of Archbishop Roger, who had been provost of Beverley and arch-deacon of York. Thus to these elderly men, specially selected as being conversant with the older times, the phrases "senior king" and "junior king" must have been household terms as referring to Henry II. and his son, Prince (or rather Duke) Henry. On the other hand, the clerks who reduced the verdict to writing used the phrase in a different sense. No "junior" king had come before them officially: they found no "junior" king referred to on the rolls in their charge. They knew of two previous "King Henries" only—Henry I. and Henry II.; and forming the entirely erroneous conclusion that "the senior King Henry" meant Henry I., drew up the verdict accordingly. And thus its words became a very inadequate and inaccurate interpretation of its sense. There is, however, a remarkable entry in the Oblatis of 1200, which implies that Paulinus had then again obtained possession of the hospital. It is as follows:—

marc' p' confirmandis cartis suis."

As there can be no doubt that Swain followed Paulinus, although he is not mentioned in the Court record, this entry would lead to the supposition that Paulinus again obtained the mastership after Swain; that he was in possession after 1200; that he retained his position till his death; and that the jury, ignoring Swain, made the true report that after the death of Paulinus the archbishop made the illegal presentation of John.

I may add that the original recommendation of Paulinus to the dean and chapter was probably made at that early visit of the king to York in January, 1155, when he had occupied the throne not yet three months, and been the crowned king only one, and not at his second visit to the archiepiscopal city three years afterwards.

But besides Paulinus, whom alone this assize jury named, there had been certainly two other masters, probably more, Roger, a predecessor to Paulinus, and Swain his successor.

With regard to Roger, Dodsworth quotes from the Leiger Book of St. Leonard's of York, fo. 70, a grant by "Roger, rector of the hospital of St. Peter's of York, and the brethren of the said place," by which he gave to Thomas, son of John, son of Accius of Knottingley, one toft and eleven acres of land in Knottingley, "which the aforesaid Accius formerly held of us, paying to us four shillings yearly"; witnesses, William, son of Hugh of Knottingley, and Ralph Paganel. This latter being dead in 1130, the date of the grant is fixed as being at least before that year, and a generation before the first admission of Paulinus to the mastership. (Dodsworth cxx. 14.—Yorks. Arch. Journal, xi. 440.)

Swain occurs as witness to two charters of Roger Mowbray to Fountains concerning land at Birnebem, the first of these documents being witnessed among others by "magister Swanus de hospitali," and by Ralph de Glanville, sheriff of Yorkshire. And as this last was not sheriff till Michaelmas, 1163, the date of Swanus as custos is clearly fixed as subsequent to that of Paulinus, appointed in 1155.

The same "Swanus, master of the hospital of St. Peter, York," occurs also as a witness to the grant of Kinalton church to Roger, Archbishop of York, who died 1181: though that is little help to us, except as confirming the statement that at least he did not precede Paulinus.

But there is one later trace of Swain that I have seen, this time in a rather misleading conjunction with Paulinus; misleading, because Swain is named first in order, and thus appears to be first in time, which as we have seen he certainly was not. This was on 7 Kalends of September (August 23rd), 1241, when Archbishop Gray confirmed two grants by former masters of St. Leonard's. One from "Suanus," formerly custos of the hospital of St. Peter; the second being from "Paulinus, formerly custos, and his brethren."

We may thus conclude that Paulinus resigned the mastership of the hospital, and became vicar of Leeds after 1165, at which date Adam Fitz-Peter inherited, who made the Smeathall grant, and before 1181, the date of the death of Archbishop Roger, who instituted him, as we shall shortly see. I should, however, notice that at the time of the survey of the possessions of the Knights Templars in 1185 (Mon. Ang., vii. 831), a "Paulinus the priest" held Whitkirk church from them for three marks, but it is not clear that this was Paulinus de Leeds, especially as there is found, at or about the same time, a Paulinus the chaplain witnessing three charters to the monks of Pontefract, in one of which he is styled, "Paulinus the chaplain of Aberford," so that the probability is much in favour of there having been a second Paulinus, contemporary, but filling a much humbler sphere than that of Paulinus de Leeds.

One other authentic court roll I will now bring forward as evidence; this time with reference to the position of Paulinus de Leeds as vicar. It is from the roll of the king's court for Hilary, 6 John, 1205, which contains the record of a claim of Maurice de Gaunt against the prior of the Holy Trinity, York. The suit was quite speculative, and a claim for the third part of the advowson of the church of Leeds, the plaintiff applying for an assize as to his right thereto. The occasion of the writ was very probably the vacancy of the living by the death of Paulinus, which we may therefore assume to have taken place the previous year, say about Christmas, 1204: the claim of Maurice de Gaunt being practically for the right to appoint a vicar of Leeds.

Leeds had been constituted a vicarage even in the eleventh century; and as it was one of the earliest of such foundations in Yorkshire, I am led to remark that it is a very common misapprehension to suppose that at some unknown, uncertain time, all England was divided into parishes, and that churches were established in each, it is implied by the State or central power. Nothing, however, can be more incorrect or more divergent from the truth, than such an assertion. For the fact is that at the Conquest there were very few churches in the whole country, very few, that is to say, in proportion to the existing manors, and very few in proportion even to those that were erected in the great Norman wave of church-building during the next hundred years. The remains of Saxon churches are rare, because Saxon churches were but few. Even at the time of Domesday, when the Normans had been for twenty years in more or less complete possession of the county, there were but two churches in the wide wapentake of Staincross. Osgoldcross being a more fertile district, had invited and welcomed the settler, and in that wapentake (as I have shown in a paper in a recent Part of the Yorkshire Archaeological Journal) the proportion was considerably larger. But in Skyrack, of which Leeds is the head, besides the church at Leeds itself, the centre of the wapentake, founded in 1089 only, there were no churches except at Barwick, Garforth, Gipton, Kippax, and Swillington; there was not one in Aberford, Adel, Bardsey, Bingley, Cottingham, Guiseley, Harewood, Ilkley, or Thorner.

With this paucity of churches it ought to go without saying that there was nothing of what we understand by the "parish" system. The parson of Leeds had jurisdiction only over what we now call the township of Leeds; the other large manors of what was for so long called the parish of Leeds, and every manor of other large parishes I have named, except that which contained a church, were simply outside the border, and were waiting for the time when some noble-minded lord would provide them with a church, and make the necessary endowment for a parson. When the time came for the ecclesiastical organization of the diocese into parishes, which was not till that general organization of both Church and State which took place in the reign of Henry II.—ecclesiastically, it may be said, in the episcopate of Archbishop Roger—the manors which had no churches were allotted as contributories to those which had been provided with them, the whole being united into a "parish," called almost always (though there are a few exceptions, sufficient to prove the rule) after the manor which provided the church and the parson. These were henceforth to be common to all the contributory manors.

Thus the parish of Leeds was made to consist of the church-owning Leeds, with Bramley, Allerton, Burley, Farnley, Headingley, Holbeck, Hunslet, Potter Newton, and Wortley, each of which was destitute; and when, as sometimes was the case, either of these contributory manors subsequently acquired an ecclesiastical establishment, as at Allerton, Holbeck, and Hunslet, the building was styled a chapel. Similarly, the neighbouring manor of Adel, having but few neighbours without churches, was constituted into a parish with only two contributory manors, Eccup and Arthington; while Garforth, Kippax, and Swillington (in the district served by which churches the manors so provided were tolerably near to each other) had, in each case, only one or two contributory manors; and Harewood, like Leeds, being provided with a church in a churchless district, was a parish of many manors.

Leeds and Adel had been provided at least as early as 1089, in which year the church of each, in the sense of the building and its endowment, was given by William Paganel, the founder of both, to Holy Trinity, York. That convent thus became parsons or rectors of Leeds, with the obligation of appointing a "vicar" (or "vice" to themselves), and of paying him a third of the value of the endowment; but when the vicarage became vacant after the death of Paulinus, the owner of the manorial rights claimed, by a suit in the king's court, against the prior and convent of Holy Trinity, the right to appoint the vicar.

The course of the pleadings in the suit is exceedingly interesting and instructive; for in reply to the claim of Maurice de Gaunt, who had recently come of age after a long minority, the prior alleged that the third part claimed by the plaintiff was not vacant, being in possession of the priory, and that therefore no such assize as that solicited by Maurice ought to be taken. And in support of this defence, such important and interesting allegations were made and proved, that it is a fair subject of astonishment that they should hitherto have been overlooked by so many generations of Leeds investigators.

For the prior alleged, with logical sequence, and in legal form:—

(1) That he and his convent were the parsons (or rectors), from ancient times—that is, from the time of Ralph Paganel, ancestor of the said Maurice. (The word used was "avus," or "grandfather"; but Ralph was really his great-grandfather, as appears by the accompanying pedigree, and therefore I translate by the more general word, "ancestor.")

(2) That Ralph had, in pure alms, given the church of Leeds to the priory, for their own use; and that he had, by his charter, confirmed the gift.

(3) That William, son of Ralph, afterwards confirmed the donation of Ralph, his father; which charters of confirmation the prior produced.

(4) That the lord the king had confirmed both grants.

(5) As had, each in his turn, the Archbishops Thomas II., Thurstan, and Roger.

(6) With regard to the advowson and presentation thereto, the prior produced the letters patent of Archbishop Thomas, showing that, on the unopposed presentation of the prior and convent of Holy Trinity, he had admitted one Thomas, a clerk, to that third of the church of Leeds now claimed by Maurice; that is, to the vicarage.

(7) Moreover, he showed similar letters patent of Archbishop Roger, for the admission of Paulinus, on the same presentation; also without opposition.

The evidence being thus overwhelming, Maurice made no reply, and allowed judgment to be given that the assize should not proceed, on the ground that Maurice had not contradicted that the confirmation of William, his predecessor, had been made after the donation of Ralph Paganel; nor did he impugn the confirmation of the king and of the three archbishops, all of which had been produced; neither did he deny that Archbishop Thomas had instituted Thomas on the presentation of the prior, and that Archbishop Roger had admitted Paulinus on the same presentation. The judgment thus given confirmed the right of presentation to be in the priory of Holy Trinity.

No later presentation to the vicarage than that of Paulinus by Archbishop Roger being alleged, the inference is that there had been none such, and that the suit had been commenced on the vacancy in the living caused by the death of Paulinus. The date of that event is approximately fixed as having been recent, and within the canonical term. I have suggested, therefore, about Christmas, 1204.

From this document and the Rievaulx Chartulary, we thus learn the names of three early vicars of Leeds, all antecedent to what is called Torre's List, which commences in the time of Archbishop Gray:

THOMAS, instituted by Archbishop Thomas (1109-1114).

AILSI, „ ante 1165.

PAULINUS, „ by Archbishop Roger (c. 1167); dead 1204.

Even if there was no vicar between Thomas and Ailsi, this addition of three early vicars to Torre's List is satisfactory. But I do not think that we yet have all, and I trust that the further research which I wish to stimulate among those who should be interested, will presently disentomb others. I feel that I have made but a beginning; and that since so many Leeds men with open minds are now interested in these investigations, the right man will presently emerge.

There is one episode in the career of Paulinus which deserves some remark, especially as ill-founded comment has sometimes been made upon it. Paulinus de Leeds seems to have been, in 1186, marked out for elevation to the episcopate. Carlisle had been founded by Henry I., with an insufficient endowment, and he had appointed to it, Nicholas Adelavus, prior of Nostell, called also Adelwald in the contemporary papal rescripts, with the curious facility common to them in that age of mutilating and obscuring English proper names. This Adelavus (improperly Adelwald) had been the king's chaplain, and had held concurrently the wealthy priorship of Nostell and the newly-founded bishopric, which was little more than titular; and after his death, which occurred on the morrow of Ascension-day (10th May), 1157, while the new buildings of the priory at Pontefract—rendered necessary by the ferocity of the “war” for the honour and estates of Pontefract, which, after the death of Ilbert de Lascy the younger, was waged between the Earl of Lincoln and Henry de Lascy—were approaching completion, the see of Carlisle became vacant, and so remained during the whole of the reigns of Henry II. and his two sons. But towards the close of the reign of the old patron of Paulinus, during the last visit of that monarch to Carlisle, an attempt was made to induce Paulinus to accept the see which had been vacant nearly thirty years. Roger Houeden, or Howden (Hoveden, as the name is sometimes spelt), who, as a Yorkshireman of good church position, well knew the settings of the various ecclesiastical currents of his time, tells us (in his Annals, sub anno 1186) that the king, to encourage its acceptance by Paulinus, offered to add to the endowment of the bishopric of Carlisle the churches of Bamborough and Scarborough, the chapel of St. Nicholas in Tickhill Castle, and two of his own Cumberland manors, amounting in the whole to three hundred marks; but the inducement was still inadequate, for the Leeds vicar persisted in his refusal of the profitless preferment, having, apparently, no wish to occupy the anomalous position of place without power, which had been that of his father. No other attempt seems to have been made in this direction, the death of the old king shortly followed, and it was not until the time of Henry III. that the episcopal line became firmly seated at Carlisle, in the person of Hugh de Beaulieu, though no doubtful mention is made of a Bernard in the interval (see the Whitby Chartulary, Nos. 35 W, 36 W and 37 W, and the Guisborough Chartulary, Nos. 1142 G and 1143 G).

On the other hand, during that very year, 1186, in which Paulinus de Leeds was selected for Carlisle, there were no fewer than seven other English sees vacant (York, Salisbury, Hereford, St. Asaph, Exeter, Lincoln, and Worcester); to the first of which the Dean and Chapter made as many as five nominations, two being of York dignitaries, and all being rejected by the king. Moreover, Robert de Botevelein, dean of York, actually died while the king was thus at Carlisle; and as Paulinus was nominated to neither of these vacancies, it would appear as if he was selected for the northern diocese because, being vicar of Leeds, he might be able to hold and administer the valueless dignity of Carlisle, as Adelavus had done while prior of Nostell. Paulinus, however, thought not, even with the added revenues offered by the king.

The following is a chronology of his life:—

1154. A simple medicus.

1155. Appointed master of St. Leonard's, that is, St. Peter's hospital. After 1165, and before 1181. Instituted vicar of Leeds by Archbishop Roger, on the presentation of the prior and convent of Holy Trinity.

1186. Bishop-designate of Carlisle.

1205. Dead. A suit entered as to the right to present to the vicarage.

I have already given the names of the four sons of Ralph Novellus, and of a son of Paulinus. But a second son of Paulinus, Thomas, made for himself a name in the archiepiscopal city, and became in his turn a member of the cathedral chapter. This Thomas tested No. 57 and No. 115 in the Rievaulx Chartulary, and after he had become canon, No. 283 of Whitby. There is, moreover, in the Bodleian an original charter from him (No. 30 in the catalogue) renouncing a claim which (also under the Mowbray influence) he had made concerning the boundaries of Welburn, next his lands of Nagelton (Nawton) and Wombleton. In this charter he describes himself as "Thomas filius Paulini canonicus ecclesiæ S'cti Petri, Ebor.," while in its body he names John de Hereford as his "cognatus" and "Robert Paulini" as his "nepos."

This latter term is of unusual interest; for by its use, at that time, when the insistence upon the necessity of clerical celibacy had commenced, Thomas the canon owned Robert as his son, "nepos," literally nephew, being the well-understood denotation of the legitimate son of a man in clerical orders, while the surname used by Robert evidences that the family surname was on the verge of becoming Paulin or Palin; but I have not traced it farther.

Thus we have:—

Ralph Noel, bishop, alive in 1150.

Paulinus de Leeds, dead in 1204.

Thomas the canon.

Robert Palin.

I do not know whether Robert Palin handed down that name, or whether he reverted to the original Noel as used by his great-grandfather; but a Robert Noel was much in evidence in his time. He was, however, a dependent of the Lascies and not of the Mowbrays, as the York Noels generally were. He witnessed several charters of Edmund de Lascy, including three to the monks of Pontefract, two to the monks of Whalley, and one to the men of West Chepe juxta Tanshelf, which was a practical enlargement of the borough of Pontefract. He was also instituted, on the presentation of the same lord, to the rectory of Kirk Bramwith. This was on 16 Kalends of February, 1251-2.

I have likewise met with a Richard, son of Alan Noel, at Smeaton, who gave two bovates there to Kirkstall. There was also, as I have before said, a group of Noels owning moor at Rawcliffe, near Snaith, who were possibly a branch from those of York, and perhaps even that son of Paulinus who witnessed the charter of William de Stuteville to Hod; for he was a Ralph de York, a generation later than Paulinus de Leeds, that is two generations later than Ralph the bishop, of whom he was probably a namesake.

The following is deduced from the Selby Chartulary:—

Ralph Noel de York, 773, 821, 822, 824.

Peter, 773, 774, 775, 821, 822, 824.

Agnes the heiress, who parted with the property, 775, 826.

An unconnected William Noel was at the same place (No. 812), and an Alan Noel had land at Hillam and (Monk) Fryston, while the Pontefract Chartulary gives a Richard, who with Robert Noel witnessed a charter of Robert de Lascy, about 1190. But I have hitherto failed to connect either of them with this main line of descent.

[The letters G, P, and W, after some of the references, indicate the Chartularies of Guisborough, Pontefract, and Whitby respectively. 207A is the first part of the Lansdowne document.]

"Some mowers last week found ice on their scythes early in the morning."

"On Thursday last, at Parish Church, Richard Stephenson, late an eminent draper, to Miss Lepton, an agreeable young lady with a handsome fortune."

"Yesterday died Thomas Batty, aged 91, of Lydgate, in this town."

No. 6.
Aug. 6.

"On Thursday last, at St. Peter's Church, Mr. Christopher Thompson, to Mrs. Sagar, an agreeable maiden gentlewoman, with a very considerable fortune."

"Northowram, nigh Halifax, on Friday morning, Elias Patefield, aged 100, and soon after departed his wife, aged 99."

"The Revd. Mr. Fawcett, M.A., is licens'd to the curacy of Holbeck, vacated by the death of Mr. Carr, upon the nomination of the Revd. the Vicar of Leedes."

(1) Mr. John Berckenhout was a native of Hamburg, and died 4 March, 1759. They had issue: John, born 8 July, 1726; Matthias Jacob, born 5 Nov., 1730; James, born 28 Feb., 1733; Frederick, born 18 Nov., 1728, and died an infant; Frederick and Anne, twins, born 1 July, 1732; Catalina, born 5 Sept., 1727, married Mr. Coster, of Leeds, merchant; Elizabeth, married 14 March, 1759, Mr. Matthew Carrett, of Lisbon, merchant, son of Mr. Will. Carrett, of Leeds.—Wilson's MS. For notes on the Carretts, see Batty's Rothwell, pp. x. and 126. A portrait in oil of James Kitchenman is in the retiring-room of the Leeds City Council.—G.D.L.

No. 9.
Aug. 27.

"On Sunday last the Revd. Mr. Fawcett attended with near a thousand people from Leedes, and all the constables of the borrough, eighteen in number, made a second attempt to perform Divine Service at the chapel of Holbeck, to which he was deservedly nominated by the Vicar of Leedes, the legal patron, and duly licenc'd by the Archbishop of York; but immediately upon his approaching the chapel he was opposed by a furious, frantic, lawless rabble of Holbeckers, who assaulted him with dirt, stones, and brickbats, and whatever instrument of violence their fury cou'd furnish. Being treated in this insolent, unheard-of, audacious manner, and finding that no access cou'd be gained to the chapel, but by his attendants exerting violence and repelling force by force, he thought proper (consistent with his truly Christian disposition) to retire under the conduct of those who went there voluntarily to protect his person."

No. 10. "Boot and Shoe Inn to be sold, and four cottages. Abram Crakenthorpe, Sept. 3. owner."

No. 11. Missing.

No. 12. "On Wednesday last Mr. Fawcett for the first time performed Divine Sept. 17. Service in the chapel of Holbeck, but was escorted to and from the chapel by a party of Dragoons, who kept guard at the doors during the service. Notwithstanding this precaution, some evil-disposed people found means to break the windows and throw a brickbat at Mr. Fawcett while he was in the reading-desk. The Sunday following he went through the service unmolested. And on Sunday last he preached a most excellent sermon, 46th verse of 13th chapter of Acts. . . . The same night some prophane sacrilegious villains broke into the chapel and besmeared the seats with human excrements." . . .

No. 13. "On Sunday last the Rev. Mr. Fawcett was received and behav'd to by Sept. 24. his congregation at Holbeck with great decency. . . . One of Mr. F.'s friends admitted their favourite preacher to his pulpit in the town—by this means the tumultuous part of the people were mostly drawn away from Holbeck, and the curate left at liberty to perform his duty amongst the peaceable and well-disposed inhabitants of the chapelry."

"The Editors return thanks to the Subscribers for the great encouragement given to this paper."

No. 14. "Wm. Dennison, Esq., was unanimously elected Mayor of the Corporation. Oct. 1. The gentleman is at present abroad."

No. 16. "We are credibly informed that on Tuesday the 12th of Nov. next, a Oct. 15. society of gentlemen in this town intend to publish 'Notes and Animadversions, Critical and Explanatory,' on a certain paper advertised to be published, called the Instructor. And that the said gentlemen will continue the same occasionally under the title of Flagellum stultorum; or, The Times revived."

"We hear that Gent Unwin, Esq., an eminent Italian merchant, who died lately in London, as mentioned in the London papers, has left the bulk of his fortune, amounting to the sum of £50,000 to Mr. Bischoff of this town."

Advertisement of library of 1,700 books, being the library of Rev. Thomas Rhodes, of Batley.

"It is with great pleasure we hear that a sum sufficient to support the lamp in Cross Parish and New Street for the ensuing winter, is already raised within that district: And that subscriptions are on foot for procuring an Act of Parliament this next session to enlighten the whole town with lamps."

"Last Friday, Mr. Aldm. Brooke was unanimously chosen Mayor of this Corporation, in the room of Mr. Wm. Dennison, who was declared Mayor-elect last Michaelmas, but did not think proper to attend this honorary call of the Corporation."

No. 20.
Nov. 12.

"On Thursday se'nnight was broke open the house of Samuel Waddington, an honest and industrious farmer in Bramhope, near Otley, and from thence was taken a box, the contents whereof were of £300 value."

"On Tuesday last, betwixt the hours of five and six, as one Craven, a cloth maker, who lives at Horbury, was returning from Leedes market, he was stopp'd on Rothwell-Hague by two men on horseback, one of which brandishing a sword before his face and demanding his money, took from him two guineas in gold and two shillings and sixpence in silver."

"About half an hour after, Jno. Briggs, a gardener in Wakefield, was attacked upon the same common by the above two persons, &c.; and about seven o'clock on the same evening, Mr. Pyeman, a tanner at Lofthouse, and Cheeseborough, a shoemaker of Oswald Green, were attacked by the same two persons, who took from Mr. Pyeman his watch and a sum of money, and from the shoemaker five shillings in silver."

"The day following, Jaques Saggarson, a French fencing master, was taken up on suspicion, and committed to York Castle by —. Smith, Esq."

"Saturday last the house of Joshua Lister, of Roundhay, nigh Leedes, was broke open, and about £40 taken therefrom, together with a loaded fowling-piece. This robbery was committed in the open day, while the above Lister with his servant were at Leedes Fair."

No. 42. "On Sunday night, the 6th instant, died at Islington, near London, April 15. aged 65, Rich. Rawlinson, LL.D., F.R.S. and A., &c. He was 3rd son of Sir Thos. Rawlinson, Knt., Lord Mayor of London, 1706. A descendant from the antient family of Clark-hall, in Lancashire, and a relative of the famous General Monk, afterwards Duke of Albemarle. The Doctor was a gentleman commoner of St. John's College, Oxford. He also obliged the curious as an author, translator, and editor of many learned treatises in history, antiquities, topography, biography; and he employed several of the finest hands in engraving a great number of effigies, burtos, statues, basso-relievos, royal grants, papal bulls, donation deeds in abbeys, &c.; amongst those are several settled on Kirkstall Abbey near this town, soon after its foundation in 1150."

J——n W——st——y, arch- May 13. preacher among the Methodists*, waited upon Dr. Curvus to thank him, as we hear, for his two excellent discourses lately preached at St. Peter's, and now ready for the Press; the design of which, if they have any, is to establish Methodism upon the ruin of good works and sound learning."

And on Friday the Doctor mounted on his grey palfrey, and attended by two ladies in a chaise, returned the visit in great form to Mr. W—st—y at his own house in the Boggart Close, where he candidly heard a long Preachment from the † Calamite; with which he returned home so well satisfied, that the next evening he repeated his visit. But here it may not be amiss to remark how consistently the Doctor acted with himself in the route that he took to the Boggart Close, instead of pursuing the direct straight road, he went along Kirkgate, up March Lane, and down Quarry Hill, and thus curvedly circumvented the Boggart House."

"To the gentlemen and all other inhabitants of the town of Leedes. 10th January, 1758:—

"As the scheme for reducing the price of coals, proposed by Charles Brandling, Esq., has met with all proper encouragement at two meetings held for that purpose by the gentlemen and principal inhabitants of the said town, and a most generous subscription set on foot for establishing the same, it is therefore desired (as it is hoped the intended waggon way will be completed about Lammas next) that the inhabitants of this town will all concur to encourage the said scheme, and decline to give car to any 1758 insinuation that may be offered to the prejudice of so laudable an undertaking, which, when once completed, Mr. Brandling will stand obliged to serve the inhabitants of the said town with coals of as good quality as any other coal, and much cheaper than they can be supplied with elsewhere. And for the benefit of the said town, this is to give notice, that attendance is this day given and will be continued at the Three Legs by the Agents of the said Mr. Brandling, to contract with gentlemen and others to serve them with coals of the best quality from Middleton Colliery at sixpence per corf at their respective dwelling-houses, and the corf to contain 7,680 cubic inches, which by a late experiment is found to weigh sixteen stones and upwards.—Richard Humble."

"William and Thos. Fenton advertise to contract with gentlemen, &c., for fresh-drawn clean-dressed Bottom Coals at sixpence per corf of three bushels (Winchester measure), unheaped, and to weigh 16 stones."

Adel.

ADEL was one of the many manors granted by William I. to his half-brother, Robert, Count of Mortain. It had previously been the property of Aluuard, owner of Arthington and other vill; and with Arthington it was subinfeudated by the count, after its acquisition by him, to Richard de Surdeval. The Domesday record sets forth that "in Adele the same Aluuard had one manor of $1\frac{1}{2}$ carucates geldable, "where two ploughs may be. Richard has it, and it is waste. Wood "pasture one leuga long, and one wide. The whole manor $1\frac{1}{2}$ leugae "long, and one leuga wide. In King Edward's time worth ten "shillings."

The non-mention of a church in this record is an indication, though not proof positive, that no church as yet existed in the vill. But there is charter-evidence that during the next fourteen years, before the close of the reign of William II., the first church of Adel had come into existence.

Ralph Paganel, or Paynel, a tenant-in-chief in Yorkshire and Lincolnshire, married Matilda, a daughter of Richard de Surdeval, and obtained with her a great dowry, including, among other vills, Adel and Arthington. Among his own possessions was a certain church in York, dedicated to the Holy Trinity; "formerly," as Ralph himself tells us, "adorned with canons and rents of farms and ecclesiastical ornaments, "but now reduced almost to nothing." This church, in the desire of re-establishing it in the service of God, he assigned to the Benedictine monastery of Marmoutier, Tours, in perpetual possession; and he accompanied the gift by a handsome endowment, for the support of the monks to be placed at Trinity. This endowment included "the "church of St. John of Adela, and a carucate of land and the tithes of "Ardintona, and of all the vills which belong to it, and the tithes of "the demesne" (hauiae). This grant was made in the reign of William II., and, it is recited, with the assent of Ralph's wife, Matilda, and his sons, William, Jordan, Elias, and Alexander. The grant also recites that the endowment was made under the authority of the king, William II. The confirmation of Henry I., in which Adel church is mentioned, was likewise obtained, at an early period of his reign. Ralph Paynel's vill of Adel descended to his younger sons, Jordan and Alexander, successively; and a confirmation by Alexander of his father's grants to Trinity priory, including Adel Church, is in existence.

The first church of Adel, we may conjecture, was built by Ralph Paynel. From the vills in this district which had come to him with his wife,—Adel, Arthington, Cookridge, Burdon, and Eccup,—the parish was formed. The original church was probably upon, or very near, the site of the present one, and may very likely have been principally constructed of wood. Whitaker expresses surprise at the situation of the church—"at the southern extremity of the parish, and at the greatest distance within the parish from its most fertile portion." He can only account for this by the suggestion that Burdon was then a populous village. It may perhaps rather be assumed that the position of the church was fixed by Ralph Paynel principally with a view to his own convenience. It is not improbable that he had established a place of occasional residence in the district, in the vicinity of the present Cookridge Hall.

Cookridge was another of Aluuard's manors which had been given after the Conquest to the Count of Mortain, and by him granted to Richard de Surdeval. It was afterwards subinfeudated, probably in the reign of Stephen, to the Mustel family, who already or subsequently owned lands near Wragby, Lincolnshire, in which county the Paynels had great estates. An early mention of the Mustels, in connection with the Adel district, occurs in the following important charter by William Paynel, son and successor of Alexander Paynel, which is copied in the eighth volume of the Dodsworth MSS., fo. 81^d:—

"Know all men, &c., that I, William Paynel, grant and confirm, &c., to God and St. Mary, and the house of Kirkestal and the monks there serving God, and their successors for ever, half a carucate of land in Kukeriz,¹ which Adam, son of Hucke, held of me, with the toft and croft and all the appurtenances, in wood, in plain, &c., and particularly in those two essarts whereof one is below his house (subtus domum suam), the other on the other side of the road, by the metes and bounds by which the same Adam held them; and with all the land which the said Adam had before he gave it to the monks, and the service and homage of Adam and his wife and children, and I quitclaim them for ever to the said house. Moreover, I give to the same house pasture in the same vill to sixty beasts (animalibus) and three hundred sheep and sixty pigs, in all pastures, whether in wood or plain, belonging to the vill, except Heselwode,¹ but so that if any of their animals or cattle should be found within that wood without a keeper, they shall withdraw without cause of action: and so that the sixty pigs of the monks may feed in the same wood, to wit Heselwode, with my pigs, in the time of pannage, but if I shall have no pigs, theirs shall nevertheless feed there throughout the time of pannage. All these things I give and grant to them in perpetual alms, free and quit of all services and terrene customs, saving that the monks shall give to me and my heirs yearly eight shillings for all services which appertain to the land—to wit, four shillings at Martinmas and four at Whitsuntide. And I will truly acquit to them the said land wheresoever, and against all men, and particularly against Roger Musteile and his mother and their heirs. Moreover, I allow to the said Adam, or to him who shall hold the land from the same house, common of pasture to six oxen and twenty beasts, twenty pigs and forty sheep, thirty goats and three horses, on the same conditions as above-named. I also allow to the said monks, and to him who shall hold the same land from them, free entry and exit within and without the vill for their animals and cattle in going to pasture and returning. And they, both the monks and he who shall hold the land from them, shall take of my wood, for their buildings and for other things necessary to be done on the same land. I further grant to the said monks that they may have three men on the same land, one to the same Adam and two to the abbot and monks, which men shall take of my wood to the building of their houses and to other things necessary on the same land; but so nevertheless that the number of their animals and cattle shall be included in the number of those of the monks and Adam. Moreover, when the monks received the land, they gave me in recognition twelve marks of silver. These being witnesses,—Thomas son of Thomas de Eboraco, William son of Hugh de Lethelai, Robert le Poer, Waltheus de Ihedune, Paulinus the priest of Ledes, Hamelinus the chaplain of Adele, Serlo de Poula, William de Withetuna, Philip de Alta Ripa and Robert his brother, Thomas Petevin, William de Occlethorp, Ranulf de Rigtun, Roger de Foderingeheia, Roger son of Peter de Arthingtune, Peter de Arthingt', Samson and Alexander and Hugh de Alretune, Theobald Francus, Richard son of Walding, William de Mensintune, Richard Macer, Ralph de Lofthusum, Robert de Brerhaga, Robert and Thomas servants (ministri) of the king, and all the wapentake at Horseford. In the year from the Incarnation of the Lord mclxxii., in the cycle of nineteen xiii."

The grantor of this deed, William Paynel, son of Alexander and grandson of Ralph, had succeeded to his father's lands late in the reign of Stephen. The seal was remaining when Dodsworth copied the deed, and bore a man on horseback, with "sigillum Willielmi Painei." The list of witnesses is valuable, giving, in several instances, the earliest known members of local families.

The special warranty in this charter against Roger Mustel and his mother—as regards the latter, referring, no doubt, to rights of dowry—indicates that the claims of the Mustels to Cookridge dated at least from the time of Roger's father; and it may also be taken as an indication that some difference as to those claims already existed.

In a nearly contemporary document, William Paynel's return of his knight's fees in 1166, preserved in the Black Book of the Exchequer, we find that he reports in the following terms:—"Of my demesne of Cugrige and of the soke, I serve for half a knight. I have no knight of the new feoffment (i.e. enfeoffed since the reign of Henry I.) except Jordan Paynel, of half a knight's fee, and William de Widen and Roger Fitz Peter and Robert de Alta Riva, of half a knight." Jordan Paynel's half-fee was in another district; but each of the other three vassals named, William de Widen or Witon, Roger Fitz Peter (doubtless Roger Mustel), and Robert de Alta Ripa or Dautrey, can be shown from subsequent charters to have had rights, or at any rate claims, in the parish of Adel; and it may be taken that the half-fee which they held of William Paynel was here, forming, with the half-fee in his own hands, a complete fee, from which the service of one knight was due. The whole fee was taken at twenty carucates of land.

The holdings of these three men in the half-fee were not equal. Robert's is clearly defined by a subsequent charter,¹ where it is stated to have comprised one carucate in Cookridge, two carucates and a half in Eccup, and half a carucate in Adel: in all four carucates, for each of which he paid William Paynel a yearly service of two shillings. The whole of this land was afterwards given to the Hospitallers.

The holding of Roger Mustel is more difficult to define with certainty. As previously stated, the original grant was probably to his father, Peter Mustel, and it would appear that it was considered by the Mustels as giving them claims over the larger part of the parish. At any rate, they asserted, by various charters still known to us, the feudal tenancy of all Cookridge; of all Adel, and its entire soke; and of Toftthouse, or Touhouse, a vill now lost, but probably to the east of Eccup. As I have before intimated, these claims appear to have been disputed; and it is probable that, were the law records of the period still in existence, we should find that long litigation took place on the subject in the second half of the twelfth century. Almost every charter of William Paynel's relating to the district is suggestive of this. Robert de Alta Ripa's land was, as before stated, given to the Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem; and in a charter by William Paynel, making or confirming this grant, he adds to his warranty the usual clause where deficiency of title might exist, that if he or his heirs should not be able to warrant the land to the Hospital, they would give an equivalent; and in fact there are two subsequent charters by which he does actually give to the Hospitallers such an equivalent,—one granting the mill of Hooton Pagnell in exchange for the mill of Adel, "which the said brethren lost by defect of my warranty;"¹ the other granting them land and pasture in Hooton, "in exchange for three carucates of land of Eccup and of Adel."² It may be noted that the land in Hooton given for these three carucates only extended to a quarter of a carucate,—an indication of the comparatively small value of land in Adel and Eccup at this period.

The following charter by William Paynel refers to the carucate in Cookridge claimed by the Alta Ripa or Dawtry family, and an expression in it shows that when it was granted proceedings respecting that land must have been in progress:—

"Be it known to all present and future, that I, William Painel, have quitclaimed to the Hospitallers of Jerusalem and the heirs of Robert de Alta Ripa two shillings which they owed to me annually for the land of Cukeriz; in such wise that if the said Hospitallers and heirs shall recover the said land, they shall hold it from the monks of Kirkstall, doing to them the service which was due to me. Witnesses:—Robert de Gaunt, Walter de Scotinge, Henry de Gant, Hugh de Hedune (Yeadon), William de Baillol, Ankestin de Bulmer, William de Hedune, John del Alnei, Theobald Francus, Gadordus, Richard de Curci."³

Robert de Gaunt, the first witness, died in 1192. As regards Cookridge, whatever the disputes may have been, they were finally settled in a manner very satisfying to the monks of Kirkstall, by the two following important charters, by which the ownership of the whole vill was ceded to the abbey:—

“Be it known to all present and future, that I, Roger Musteile, give and grant, and by this my charter confirm, to God and St. Mary and the monks of Kirkestal, in perpetuity, Cukeriz, with the men and houses, with tofts and crofts, woods, and all things appertaining to the same vill, in wood and plain, &c., in pure and perpetual alms, free and quit from all terrene service which belongs either to the king or the lords, or any such service whatever; in such wise that I and my heirs will warrant to them (i.e. the monks) this land wheresoever and against all men. And this I have done for the health of my soul and the souls of my heirs and my father and mother and all my predecessors, and for the aid which the monks rendered me, namely, that they acquitted to me my land against my lord, William Painel, Adele, to wit, and its soke, of the mortgage in which he had held it. And I have affirmed that I will maintain this gift and alms without fraud or bad faith, and that I will not sell or mortgage any land of the soke of Adele (and particularly to a religious house) without the advice and consent of the monks of Kirkestal. And if I shall desire to change my life,¹ the monks will admit me; but if I shall die a secular, they will do service for me as for a monk. And whereas certain controversy arose between the said monks and me and Drogo Fitz Ralph, as to certain appurtenances of the said vill, namely, Heselwde, Ploxlandes, and the mill; in order that all disputes may be settled, I, Drogo Fitz Ralph,² grant, and by the attestation of my seal confirm, the above gift of Roger Musteile, and ratify it, so that if Roger or his heir should attempt to raise any difficulty with the monks, I, Drogo, will stand with the monks and for the monks, to enforce this grant: and to this I have pledged my faith.” The witnesses are,—Drogo Fitz Ralph, William Paynel, William son of Hervei, Baldwin de Bramhope, Herbert de Arches, Osbert the clerk of Drogo, Symon a monk of Kirkstead, Peter de Alta Ripa and Philip his brother, Paulinus the priest of Leeds, Waltheof de Yeadon, Peter de Arthington, Adam de Preston, Thomas son of Peter. The seals of both Roger and Drogo had been appended. Dodsworth sketches them; Roger’s is apparently a lion rampant, with ‘sigillum Rogeri Mvsstail’; Drogo’s is described as “on horseback, yellow wax.”³

² I am unable to identify Drogo Fitz Ralph, thus made a party to the grant, unless he were a brother of Baldwin Fitz Ralph, holder of the adjoining vill of Bramhope, a witness to this deed.

“Be it known to all present and future, that I, William Painel, grant and by this my charter confirm to God and St. Mary and the monks of Kirkestal for ever, for the health of my soul and my wife’s and my heirs’, and for the souls of all my ancestors, that donation which Roger Musteile made to them, namely Cukeriz, with everything belonging to that vill, as Roger’s charter witnesses, in pure and perpetual alms, free from all terrene service. And that I and my heirs may be participators in this act of charity and in all the blessings of their house, we will at all times acquit the monks of foreign service, of county, riding, or wapentake, and all services which appertain to the lord king, or other secular service, namely as much as is due from the land which Roger gave them, that is three carucates, of ten which make half a knight’s fee. So that if by any chance the land shall fall into my hands, or my heir’s, the monks shall hold it from me or my heir by the same alms and the same liberty as Roger granted. And I have sworn, in the hand of Thomas Peitevin, to maintain this without fraud or evil intent. Witnesses:—Samson de Alretune, Thomas Peitevin, Roger Musteile, William de Withetune, Adam Painel, Adam Peitevin, Alexander de Alreton, William son of Nicholas, Robert servant (minister) of the king, Gilbert Scot of Newton, Hugh son of William de Withetun, William son of Roger Musteile, Adam de Cukeriz, Richard Painel, Gilbert Painel, William Painel.” Dodsworth describes the seal:—“On horseback, sigillum Willielmi Painel, yellow wax.”¹

By these two deeds the vill of Cookridge was finally conveyed to the convent of Kirkstall, with whom it remained for more than three centuries and a half. The monks considered it advisable also to clear out of their way any possible claims by the Alta Ripa family, and they therefore obtained from William, son and heir of Robert de Alta Ripa, a release of one carucate in Cookridge, to which the concurrence of the Hospitallers was likewise procured; and at a later date, some claims which Peter de Arthington appears to have had in the vill were also settled, by release, and fine at York.²

From the former of these two charters it appears that Roger Mustel’s lands had been in mortgage to William Paynel. William had himself, in 1174, placed in mortgage to Robert de Gaunt, lord of the manor of Leeds, his lands in Cookridge and Adel, to secure twenty marks of silver. Robert and William were connected by marriage, the wife of Robert being William's cousin, Alice Paynel.¹

As regards the remaining vassal in Adel, referred to by William Paynel in the return of the Black Book of the Exchequer—William de Widen²—there is an original charter preserved in the Bodleian Library, to the following effect:—

“Be it known to all present and future, that I, Roger Musteile, give and grant to William de Wytheton Tofhusum, to wit one carucate of land, with all belonging to it, as I held it, with common of Ecob (Eccup) within and without the field, as far as the mill of Adele, in wood and plain, &c., for his homage and service, freely and quietly, to be held to him and his heirs of me and my heirs, in fee and perpetual inheritance; rendering thence the fortieth part of the service of one knight, namely, as much as belongs to half a carucate where twenty carucates make a knight's fee. (Warranty.) Witnesses:—Alexander, abbot of Kirkstall, Hugh, prior, Ralph, cellarer, William Painel and Adam Painel, Thomas Paitevin, Sampson de Alrethon, Alexander de Alrethon, Philip de Alta Ripa, Adam brother of Thomas Paitevin, Simon son of Robert son of Hubert, Gilbert Painel, William son of Nicholas, Robert the hostler, and others.”³

The vill of Tofthouse, Thouhouse, or Touhouse, has disappeared. It was probably upon or near the stream which runs along the south-western boundary of Harewood Park. Dodsworth remarks that “Touehouse is

“Robert de Gaunt, Aeliz Paganella his wife, and Avicia their daughter, to all sons of Holy Church, greeting. Know that we have granted and given to God and the Hospital of St John of Jerusalem and the Brethren there serving God, the land which William the priest held of [us] in Ledes, namely two acres of land with the houses, in free pure and quiet alms, for the health of our souls and our predecessors'; and common of pasture to four oxen and as many cows, and two swine and twenty sheep. Witnesses: Henry de Laci, Alexander, abbot of Kirkstall, Aeliz de Gaunt, Robert de Mowbrai, Matilda de Morevill, Henry de Gant, Paulinus the priest of Leeds, Peter the priest, Philip the chaplain, Adam the deacon, William de Haidune (Yeadon), Theobald the steward, Rainald the chamberlain, Roger Peitevin, Roger Marshall, Ivo de Staci, William the clerk of Arderne, Godwin the reeve, Brai [of] Echope.”—Dodsworth MSS., viii., fo. 293. “William the priest” was probably an early incumbent of Leeds, a predecessor of Paulinus.

² The name of this family is spelt in many different ways—“Withetun,” “Wytheton,” “Witun,” “Withun,” and otherwise. It is generally taken to represent “Weeton.”

now parcell of Harwod parke, and the houseing pulled down." That its position was already doubtful a hundred years before Dodsworth wrote this, appears from a memorandum in the Kirkstall Rent-Roll, furnished in the Minister's Accounts, 31-32 Henry VIII., No. 174:—"He (i.e. the king's receiver) does not account for three half-pence, late of the free rent of William Gascoign, knight, for certain lands in Thoues yearly, because he knows not as yet where the said lands lie: (Memorandum, that better enquiry be made thereof)." But that Toft house was a well marked vill in the earlier times appears certain from the repeated references to it in charters and elsewhere. The vill appears to have descended from the family of the above donee, William de Wytheton, through his son Hugh, and his grandson Adam,¹ to the Sampsons. There is a Memorandum at fo. 14 of the Kirkstall Coucher Book, that John Sampsey took seisin of the manor of Thouehus in 1270. In 1284-5 John Sampson held the carucate of land here of the abbey of Kirkstall, to whom it had been conveyed in the general grant of the soke of Adel by William Mustel, paying two marks for his demesne;² and in 1291 he was in litigation with the abbey as to his rights.³ In 2 Edward II., a fine was levied, evidently in consequence of a settlement, between John de Valencene and Milisenta his wife, plaintiffs, and John Sampson and Agnes his wife, defendants, of the manor of Touehouse and lands in Harewood; to have to the said John de Valencene and Milisenta and their heirs,—remainder to Helen, sister of Milisenta, and her heirs,—remainder to Maud, sister of Helen,—remainder wholly to Thomas de Batetorte and his heirs for ever.⁴ By 1459 the property had come to the Gascoignes, who then held it by a free rent of 28s. 2d.⁵ How this had been diminished during the next eighty years to 1½d., as above, it is impossible to say.

In the Parvum Registrum of the lands of Kirkstall Abbey, it is stated that William, son of Roger Mustel, gave two carucates of land here to the monks. I have not met with this charter, and it is somewhat difficult to reconcile with other documents.

The other land held by William de Wytheton in the parish of Adel comprised six bovates in Burdon, and four bovates in Iverker,—the latter a district adjacent to Burdon. These four bovates in Iverker he acquired with his wife. The whole of the ten bovates he conveyed to Kirkstall, reserving a yearly rent of ten shillings.¹ Dodsworth sketches his seal:—a bird volant, and “Sigill’ Wilielmi de Withetun.”

The ancient vill of Burdon, now represented by one or two houses northward from Eccup, is mentioned in Domesday as a manor of two carucates, formerly worth twenty shillings, but then “waste.” By the middle of the twelfth century a family bearing the local name appears as holding lands here. By a somewhat early charter, Helewise, daughter of Gamel de Burdon, gave to Kirkstall all the land “which belonged to her carucate of land in the south crofts of Burdon,” with certain pasture-rights. This was confirmed successively by her sons, Robert de Burdon and Alexander de Burdon. Other lands here were also given by these two men and their sisters. Robert, son of Peter Scot, likewise gave the monks a carucate of land in Burdon, which was confirmed by his daughters and co-heiresses, Agnes, wife of Roger Bosse, and Alice, wife of Simon de Farsley.

Another local family rising into note about this time, and destined to continue longer than most of those already mentioned, was that of Brearey. Robert de Brearey, the earliest member on record, was living about the middle of the twelfth century. His wife was Agnes, daughter of Richard Frank, and it is not improbable that he acquired with her his lands in Brearey, as the Kirkstall monks took from her a separate deed of assurance of a carucate there which Robert had granted them, giving her a consideration of half a mark of silver.² This Robert appears to have survived to about the end of the century, as there is another charter by him which cannot date many years before 1200, granting land in Burdon to the monks. He was dead early in the next century, and was succeeded by his son, Alan de Brearey, who was living in 1237. With this Alan, Thoresby commences the elaborate pedigree of the family given at pp. 125–126 of the Ducatus. In that pedigree Alan is followed by a son and grandson, both named Robert, but this is incorrect,—Alan was succeeded by

William de Brearey, and he by the two Roberts, whose dates are accurately fixed by memoranda in the Kirkstall Coucher Book.¹

William Paynel, tenant-in-chief of Adel, was dead by 1185, and was succeeded by William, his son, who married Frethesant, daughter of Hubert de Montchensy. By her he had a son, Alexander, who died before his father, and two daughters, Frethesant and Isabella, who became his co-heiresses.

In the year 1198 an agreement was made between the Abbey of Kirkstall and the Church of Adel as to tithes, which recites the lands acquired by the Abbey in this parish up to that date. The list commences with "all Cookridge with the mill," and then sets forth the grants which have been before mentioned, by Robert de Brearey, William de Witheton, Robert Scot, Helewise de Burdon and her sons Robert and Alexander, her daughters and their husbands. The donor of Cookridge, Roger Mustel, is not mentioned by name; and no gift by William Mustel, his son, is alluded to.

But within the next half-dozen years the Kirkstall monks obtained from this William a sweeping grant, by which he conveyed to them "all Adel and all the soke of Adel" at a fee-farm rent of forty shillings. This charter, by which he likewise confirmed his father's grants of "Cookridge and the mill of Scheneself," is printed in the Monasticon,² and is well known; it contains no reference to the church. But it is perhaps not so well known that, presumably not very long afterwards, a second deed was executed by William,³ containing the same gift of Adel and its soke,—the same confirmation of Cookridge

"Also memorandum, that at the Feast of St Mary Magdalene, 1293, Robert son and heir of Robert de Brerehaye was of four years, and so will be in ward for seventeen years, namely until the Feast of St Mary Magdalene, 1310."

The son of the second Robert, William, survived until 1334, when the following further memorandum in the Coucher Book indicates a third long minority:—

"Memorandum, that at Christmas, 1334, Robert son of William de Brerehagh was of two years, and so will be in ward for nineteen years, namely until Christmas, 1353."

Thoresby says that this Robert was succeeded by John, living 17 Richard II., and he by William, living 16 Henry VI.

and the mill,—practically identical in fact with the former deed in purport, with one important exception,—that the second charter contains after the gift of Adel the words “et donationem ecclesiae de Adela.” There can be little doubt that this second deed was taken for the express purpose of introducing these words.

The following is a translation of this important deed:—

“Know all present and future, that I, William Mustel, for the love of God and the health of my soul and the souls of my heirs and ancestors, have granted, and by this my present charter confirmed, to God and St. Mary and the monks of Kirkestal, all the land which they have of the gift of Roger my father, in the soke of Adele, namely, all Cukeriz, with the mill of Scheneself, as the charter of Roger my father, which they have relating thereto, witnesses. Moreover, I have given and granted, and by this my charter confirmed, to God and St. Mary and the monks of Kirkestal, Adela, and the whole soke of Adela, and the gift¹ of the church of Adela, with all its appurtenances in wood, in plain, &c., with all rents and fermes which are due to me in the said soke, and with all the services of my free men in the same soke, with wardships and escheats, and with all things belonging to me: to hold and to have from me and my heirs in perpetual alms, free, quit, and discharged from all terrene services and exactions; rendering yearly to me and my heirs three marks of silver, half at the feast of St. Botulph and half at Martinmas, and doing foreign service as much as appertains to one knight’s fee. I, moreover, and my heirs will warrant this aforesaid grant to the said monks in all places and against all men. Witnesses—William de Leleia, Hugh and Robert his sons, Adam de Ranervill and Thomas his son, Simon de Monte Alto and William his son, William Grammaticus and Richard his son, Robert le Vavassur and Malger his [‘son’ inserted and then taken out], Hugh de Wytheton, Peter de Arthinton, William Pictavensis, Nigel de Horsford, and many others.”

The church of Adel had, as has already been stated, been given by Ralph Paynel in the eleventh century to Trinity Priory, York; and the donation had been over and over again confirmed,—by Ralph’s wife and his sons, by Henry I., Henry II., and by one or two Popes.

How then could the advowson now be given to Kirkstall by William Mustel? The answer probably is that the original church had disappeared, and that a new one, the present edifice, had been erected by the Mustel family.

It seems obvious from the structure itself that the present church is not eleventh century or early Norman work. From its architectural features it may probably be referred to about the middle of the twelfth century. How the original building disappeared cannot now be stated. It may have been principally a wooden structure, and destroyed by fire, perhaps in an incursion of the Scots. It probably occupied the present site or an immediately adjoining one.¹

That the second or present church was not built until or very shortly before the time of William Paynel, son of Alexander Paynel and grandson of the probable first builder, Ralph the Domesday tenant—the William who died about 1185—is evident from a curious charter of his, formerly preserved among the muniments at Arthington, a translation of which is printed in the Monasticon,² in which the dedication of the church is alluded to evidently as a recent event; and that William himself had not been the builder may be inferred from the somewhat hostile tone of the deed, in which he expressly declines to confirm some donations of land which had been made to the church by his villeins. The Mustels were by this time no doubt in possession here, under William; and joining these facts to their subsequent claim to dispose of the advowson, it would appear most probable that to Roger Mustel or his father must be ascribed the chief credit for the present building.³ If this be so, the monks of Kirkstall may have conceived that a title to the advowson derived from the lord of the manor and direct heir of the builder of the church might override the more ancient claim of Trinity Priory. Nor can the political position, as affecting the question, be overlooked. King John was at enmity with France; Trinity was in reality little more than a cell of Marmoutier Abbey; the time seemed favourable for raising a claim where a French monastery would be the real defendant. It is a curious coincidence that at this very period an attack was made on the right of the Convent of Trinity to the Church of Leeds, their claims to which rested on exactly the same title as those to Adel Church.

¹ Perhaps some evidence of this may be drawn from the curious stones discovered during the present century under the foundation of the church (see Lewthwaite's Adel, p. 5); they are of pre-Norman style, made probably by some local mason in the fashion he had learned before the new architecture had become well known in this part of Yorkshire. These stones, evidently connected with the original church, would scarcely be of sufficient value to cause their removal to a fresh site at any great distance.

Whitaker, in his account of Adel in the Loidis and Elmete, evidently assumes the present church to be the original building erected about the end of the eleventh century; and he also appears to consider that the Arthington deed above mentioned (almost certainly made after 1160) might allude to a dedication sixty or seventy years earlier, which is very improbable. Moreover, he accuses the Kirkstall monks of the fraud of misquoting a deed so as to make it include the advowson,—being evidently, though acquainted with William Mustel's first grant of Adel and the Parvum Registrum of the Abbey, ignorant of the second charter, copied by Dodsworth. There is no warrant for a charge of forgery or actual fraud, although perhaps the obtaining of the second deed from William Mustel may savour of what would now be styled sharp practice, on the part of the monks. Mr. Lewthwaite, in his pamphlet on Adel, though more correct as to the date of the existing church, is very fanciful in his theory that it was built by direct order of King Stephen because the name of the vill reminded that monarch of his mother, Adela, Countess of Blois.

The brethren of Trinity Priory, however, were not inclined to give up their claim to the advowson, and the dispute between the two houses on the subject appears to have continued for about thirty years. Its termination is marked by a Memorandum made at fo. 15 of the Kirkstall Coucher Book to the following effect:—

“Respecting the advowson of the Church of Adel:

“Likewise, on the Nones of May was settled the dispute between the house of Kirkstall (the lord Maurice, the abbot, acting for it) and the house of Holy Trinity, York, before the Justices at Westminster, in the year of the Incarnation of the Lord, 1237, and in the twenty-first year of the reign of King Henry son of King John.”

And in the following month the settlement was confirmed by fine at Westminster, which sets forth that in consideration of the Abbot's having resigned all claim to the advowson, the Priory remits to the Abbot and his successors henceforward the yearly payment of thirty shillings which had been made by Kirkstall, under agreement, for tithes in the parish of Leeds; and further, the Prior gives up to the Abbey all the land belonging to his house in the parish of Adel, now held by three vassals at a total yearly rental of nine shillings and sixpence.¹

By a fine passed at York on the 29th February, 1204, between the co-heiresses of William Paynel, and Elias, abbot of Kirkstall, the latter surrendered to the heiresses all the land which his house held in Hooton Pagnell, namely eleven bovates and eight acres. In return, the heiresses confirmed to the abbey all the land which it held in the soke of Adel by the gift of William Mustel or his ancestors, or which it might be able thereafter to acquire in the vill; and moreover, they made a money payment of thirty marks to the abbey. There are no deeds remaining to us showing the acquisition by Kirkstall of this large tract of land in Hooton. Its relinquishment seems a heavy price to have been paid for a confirmation of the Adel land, but by this fine the abbey appears to have practically cleared away all future active interference by the Paynels in their great Cookridge fee. The Mustels also disappear from the history of the district, except for the annual payment of forty shillings to them, traces of which reappear at later dates.² They retired to their estates near Wragby, in Lincolnshire. The last of the family in the direct line, Sabina Mustel, died in 1294.

The following donation to Adel church must be referred to the end of the twelfth or beginning of the thirteenth century:—

“Hugo de Creskelde gave to God and St. Mary and the church of St. John of Adle, and Richard the chaplain of Burley, one croft and two acres of land in Creskelde, in a certain place called Elfredryding, and an acre of meadow in Hasocker. To hold to the said church in pure and perpetual alms, rendering yearly half a pound of incense on the day of St. John Baptist. Witnesses:—Peter de Arthington, Geoffrey his son, Ralph de Bramhope, Serlo de Pool, Nigel de Castley, Robert de Brearey, Alan his son, Serlo de Bramhope, William de Stubhouse.”³

¹ Thereafter the Prior and Convent regularly presented to the living, except at such times as the Crown assumed the right of presentation, on the ground that Trinity was subject to the alien house of Marmoutier. In the fifteenth century the practice of deising the right of presentation seems to have set in, and three rectors were appointed by the “assignees of the Prior and Convent.”

² The monks had, however, ceased making this annual payment before the dissolution.

The donor, Hugo de Creskeld, was living between 1195-1200, and probably some years later.

The monks of Kirkstall being now settled in possession of the manorial rights at Adel, turned their attention to the lands of the free tenants. There were a number of grants of such lands to the abbey during the thirteenth century, up to the passing of the Mortmain Act in 7 Edward I.; and from these grants and occasional law records we gather almost all the information we have of the vill for a long period. The names of old donors occasionally occur, and to them are now added new benefactors, substantial yeomen and others, some of whose families were long resident in the district. From a certain Andrew de Adel, son of Henry de Mora, the monks obtained two or three grants, probably about the middle of the thirteenth century. Richard fil' Andrew (not the same Andrew) gave them, somewhat earlier, half an acre called Bradland. Adam, son and heir of William de Cookridge, gave them all his lands in "Cokerykhous." Alan de Eccup gave a rent from land in Eccup, and Henry Stocke and Richard Attesche gave land there. In 1245-6 Ralph de Creskeld sued Adam de Tofthouse (alias Wyton) to do the service due in respect of a tenement in Adel;¹ and this service was made over by Ralph to the abbey. In the year 1237, as has already been stated, the monks obtained from Trinity Priory, York, in settlement of the dispute about the advowson, all the land of the priory in Adel, now held by three men—William fil' John, Robert Scot, and Richard fil' Aldred—who paid 9s. 6d. per annum for their holdings. Traces of the subsequent relinquishment of part of these lands to Kirkstall appear in the Monasticon. Richard, son of Richard Aldred, gave an essart in the south part of Adel. Probably nearly through the century the monks went on gradually acquiring the tenants' lands.

The first rector of Adel known to us is Alan de Thorner, who occurs as witness to a grant made by Hugh de Creskeld to Arthington Nunnery, probably in the first quarter of the thirteenth century.² This Alan is not named by Torre, whose list of rectors begins with Robert Norman, instituted 29 November, 1242.³ Robert appears to have held the living for a considerable time, as "Robert, parson of Adel," occurs as plaintiff in an action against the abbot of Kirkstall in 1268.¹ He was probably succeeded by "W. persona de Adel," likewise omitted in Torre's list, but named in a charter by Thomas de Dishforth, given most likely in the third quarter of the century. When the Taxatio Ecclesiastica was taken in 1292, the living was found to be of the value of £10 13s. 4d.

In 1284-5 the returns known as "Kirkby's Inquest" were made, and it was then found that the abbot of Kirkstall held half a fee in Arthington and half a fee in "Adell, Thouhouse, and Creskell," of Thomas Musthell, at fee farm, for forty shillings yearly; whereof the rector of Adel church held six bovates in Adel, and the heirs of Jordan Bingley the fifth part of a fee in Creskeld. John Sampson held of the abbot a carucate of land in Tofthouse.

In the fourteenth century we have two tax-rolls for the vill of Adel,—one being the assessment for the subsidy granted to King Edward III. in 1327,² levied only on the richer inhabitants; the other the poll-tax of 1379,³ which was payable by every adult not being a pauper. The latter return is therefore almost a directory for the village, and as such is of great value. The 1327 assessment contains only six names, as follows:—

Robert in le Wro	4	2
Richard de Wigdon	3	9
John le hunter	4	0
William le couhirde	3	0
Henry le hunter	1	2
Simon del grene	1	3

It will be observed that of the total sum at which the vill was assessed, the families of Cowherd and Hunter contributed nearly one-half. From the early part of the century we find traces of these two substantial yeoman families in Adel. At the assizes at York in 1314, Amice de Adel sued Henry son of Roger Underwode and Maude his wife, William Couhird and William his son, and Henry de Baildon, to recover a messuage and two bovates of land, with the appurtenances, in Adel. Henry de Baildon appeared, and pleaded that he had no interest in the land except jointly with Alice his wife. A fresh action was brought in the following year, in which Alice was joined. The Baildons admitted that they had entered on the land, but alleged that they had not disseised the plaintiff by so doing. The jury found that Amice gave the property to Henry Underwode and Maude his wife, who conveyed it to the Baildons. Judgment was accordingly entered for the defendants.¹ The house and land were granted to the abbey thirty years later by Adam de Baildon, son of Henry and Alice, and at an inquisition ad quod damnum relating thereto, held in 1346, it was found that they were held of the manor of Harewood, and were of the clear yearly value of twenty pence.² It does not appear how the Cowherd family were interested in this land, but they were themselves benefactors to the abbey, in addition to being, no doubt, its very substantial tenants. William Cowherd, named in the assessment of 1327, may have been either the elder or younger William alluded to in the above-mentioned suit by Amice de Adel: one of them witnessed the final grant of the land to the abbey in 1346. Henry Cowherd of Adel is named in a patent of 1350, printed at p. 93 ante. He also occurs in another patent of 1377, and in the Adel Poll-tax Return of 2 Richard II. In that return the same name appears also in the vill of Collingham, where likewise the abbey held lands. In 1392 Henry le Cowhyrde of Collingham and Margaret his wife gave two acres in Allerton Gledhow to the abbey, and in the following year Robert their son confirmed this grant. This family may have been connected with that of Adel, but Henry of Collingham was probably not the same person as Henry of Adel, as in a process of 1403-4, Joan, widow of Henry Cowehirde of Adel, and John his son are named.

As regards the Hunters, William Hunter of Adel witnesses a grant of land by Matilda de Arthington in 1295. Probably the two men named in the tax returns of 1 Edward III., John and Henry, were his sons. Henry son of William Hunter in 1349 gave the monks of Kirkstall a house and land in Richardsrode in Adel; and John Hunter of Adel witnesses a deed of 1346, but the name is not in Adel in the poll-tax list of 1379.

Reverting again to the names in the above tax-return of 1 Ed. III., 1327, Robert in le Wro, apparently the richest yeoman included, was of Eccup. To his son "Richard son of Robert del Wro in Ecop," Richard de Goldesburgh demised, in 1339, the messuage called East Hall, in Arthington, for life.¹ Richard de Wigdon and his father of the same name occur pretty frequently in charters of the period. Simon del Grene was perhaps represented by Magota del Grene in the poll-tax return of 2 Richard II.

From the last-named important return we learn that in that year, 1379, the adult population of Adel (including Eccup and Cookridge) was 81; of Alwoodley, 15; of Weardley, 26; of Wigton, 31; of Arthington, 62; of Harewood, 101; and of Bramhope, 34. These figures are exclusive of inhabitants notoriously so poor that they were exempt from the tax. The adults of Leeds who were taxed numbered 157. The population of the parish of Adel, including Arthington, was therefore then nearly as great as that of the town of Leeds. All or nearly all the families in Adel were engaged in agriculture, each man having his strips of land in the common fields.

The same poll-tax return for 1379 reveals the changes which had taken place in the landed gentry of the district. Perhaps the most noteworthy feature in this respect is the rise of the Frank family. In Kirkby's Inquest the Franks do not occur as landowners in the wapentake of Skyrack, but now, a century later, they are the principal landowners in three vills—Allerton Gledhow, Weardley, and Alwoodley. Although the name is an ancient one in the district,² the greater part of the possessions of the Franks in Skyrack had been acquired by repeated fortunate marriages. In Alwoodley, the ancient family of that name, which can be traced back to the early part of the reign of Henry II., had ended in heiresses in 1296: and one of these brought the Alwoodley estate to the Franks, who remained here until about 1638. Similarly, much of the estate of the Allerton family, in Allerton, had come to the Franks by the marriage of Joan, its heiress. Other changes in the ownership of land present themselves. The Burdons of Burdon were gone, so were the Creskelds and the Bingleys of Creskeld, the Peitevins of Headingley, the Dishforths of Bramhope; the Breareys remained, but were approaching the end of their connection with the vill from which they took their name. Most of the lands had slowly passed into the possession of the great religious houses. In 1393, William Baxter,¹ rector of Adel, conveyed to Kirkstall Abbey two messuages and a large tract of land in Brearey, Arthington, and Gledhow, of which he had been enfeoffed (doubtless for the purposes of this surrender) by John de Brearey. The son of this John, William Brearey, settled at Selby, and in 16 Henry VI. confirmed to the abbey all his lands in Brearey and Arthington,—“probably,” remarks Wilson, “because he had no issue.”

During the fourteenth century, there were, according to Torre's list, no fewer than fourteen changes in the incumbency of Adel, at least eight of which arose from resignations. This fact is illustrative of the constant struggle among the clergy of the period to obtain advancement in wealth and position,—to exchange a living for a richer one, and to add one living to another. The cases of some of the Adel rectors may be cited as examples of this. Ralph de Stoke Daubeney (instituted to the living between 1303 and 1308) was rector of Ufford, in the diocese of Lincoln, and was dispensed to hold another benefice of the value of £30; and on resigning other benefices not lawfully held by him, he obtained the living of Lilford, in the same diocese. Ufford had been declared to be of the value of £10, when it was worth five marks more; and he had also obtained the rectory of Adel, which he resigned. On the 8th June, 1312, he was granted a papal dispensation to retain Ufford and Lilford, and to accept another benefice of the value of £30, together with canonries and prebends of York and Ripon.²

Robert de Rihstone, or Rushton, was instituted 3rd August, 1309. He was successively rector of Little Warley, Essex, and Bracewell, Yorkshire, to the latter of which he was nominated by the Abbot and Convent of Kirkstall, the patrons; but there was a dispute as to this living between him and Nicholas de Stockton, and the latter, being a protégé of the Cardinal of St. Sabina's, was confirmed in possession in 1308. Robert then obtained the rectory of Adel, and, apparently shortly afterwards, the church of Rushton, Northamptonshire, resigning Warley. In 1311 he had a papal dispensation to retain the two livings he held, the value in all being forty marks, and to accept another, value twelve marks. He was likewise canon and prebendary of St. Mary and the Angels, York.¹

William Brande was instituted 24th Aug., 1467. The long list of preferments he held will be found in the third volume of the Testamenta Eboracensia, page 216.

There is little information available as to the history of Adel during the fifteenth century. The charters to the abbey have practically ended, and the name of the vill rarely occurs except in the record of some lawsuit; as, for instance, in the Assize Rolls of 1452-3, when we find the Abbot of Kirkstall suing Thomas Potter, Thomas Rokes, and Richard Rawes, respecting property in "Adill." But one very interesting fifteenth-century document affecting the district has been furnished by the Thoresby Society. In the first volume of these Miscellanea is given, at page 2, a rental of Kirkstall Abbey in the year 1460, taken from the original in the possession of Mr. John Stansfeld. We find from it that the monks were then in receipt of the following rents in the parish of Adel:—

Free Rents.—Of the parson of Adel, due at Whitsuntide and Martinmas, 2s. yearly. Arthington—of Robert Arthington, 6d., and 2d. for stone slating; of the heirs of Henry Leide, 13d.; of the heirs of John at beck, 6d.; of William Gascoign, for the East halle, 6d.; of the prioress of Arthington, 6d. Creskeld—of Thomas Goldsbrough, 7s. 6d. Eccup—of William Allan, 3s.; of John at Esshe, 2d.; of Robert Roger, 1s. Tofthouse—of William Gascoigne, 28s. 2d. Ordinary rents from tenants-at-will—the tenants at Adel, £7 17s. 10d.; Brearey, £19 os. 3d.²; Eccup, £4 15s.; of the Greeve of Eccup, for wapentake fines there, 2s. 6d.; of Elizabeth Arthington, for wapentake fine, 5s. 5½d. It is interesting to compare this rental with that existing at the dissolution of the abbey eighty years later.

In the month of November, 1539, Richard Layton, one of the Royal Commissioners engaged in suppressing Religious Houses in the north, appeared at Kirkstall, and on the 22nd of that month he induced the abbot and brethren assembled in the chapter-house to sign a deed of surrender of the whole property of the abbey. Thereupon, the lands of Adel, which had been for more than three centuries in the possession of the monks, passed into the hands of the king. This possibility had been before the monks for many months, and, doubtless in view of it, they had freely granted long leases of lands during the year or two immediately preceding. On the 15th October, 1538, Thomas Middleton obtained a lease of Cookridge Grange, with the lands belonging to it, for thirty-nine years, at a rental of £8 15s. 4d. On the 1st July in the same year, Christopher Lyndley, of Horsforth, had a forty years' lease of a close called "Beggar lees," and some other land near Mosley wood, at a rent of £2 6s. 8d. Other demises were made about the same time, relating to various lands in the parish. The monks, with the fear of dissolution before them, were doubtless not unwilling to make easy bargains with old acquaintances; and it has also been suggested that possibly considerable fines in ready money were obtained by them when these leases were granted.

The revenues accruing to the Crown from the whole of the possessions of Kirkstall Abbey are set forth in a return made at Michaelmas, 1540, nearly a year after the dissolution, entered in the Ministers' Accounts, 31-32 Henry VIII., No. 174. An abbreviated translation of that portion of the return which is headed "The Manor of Cuckrigge," and which includes the Adel district, is here given:—

"The manor of Cuckrigge, with its members. The account of Henry Mason, collector."

Rents of free tenants—William Armested, rector of the parish church of Adel, free holder of certain lands there appertaining to his rectory, 2s.; the same rector yearly for license to inclose and hold separately certain parcels of glebe land called "le Wayne Langleys," and "Kerdoke," 1s.; of divers tenants in Arthington, namely, Sir William Gascoign sen^r for a tenement called 'East Halle,' 6d.; of the same William, for certain tenements late John Atbek's, 6d.; of Henry Arthington, for the manor of Arthington with the appurtenances, 6d.

"Of Thomas Goldisburgh, esquire, for certain lands in Creskeld, 7s. 6d. He (i.e. the collector) does not account for a pound of cummin due of the free holding of the said Thomas Goldisburgh for the said lands; neither does he account for 1½d., late the free rent of Sir William Gascoign, for certain lands in Thoues (i.e. Tofthouse) yearly, because as yet he knows not where the said lands lie. "18s., a tenement and appurtenances there, Robert Mathewe.⁶

"19s. 8d., a tenement and appurtenances there, Richard Wyke.⁷

² Possibly the collector who renders the account.

³ This rent had been settled between the houses of Kirkstall and St. Leonard's by a deed probably made in 1274. See Rawlinson MSS., Bodleian, B 455, fo. 7.

⁶ In 1524, Robert Mathew appears in the Adel Subsidy Roll. The Mathewe family continued at Eccup until the latter part of the 17th century.

⁷ Richard Wyke occurs in the same subsidy roll. The family was represented in the parish for about a century longer.

" 23s., a tenement and appurtenances there, Thomas Northouse.¹

" 3s. 4d., a cottage and garden there, John Fressh."²

The total of the free and annual rents under this heading is £39 os. 10d., but there were also a few rents from Cookridge and Eccup among the various lands for which account was rendered by Robert Pakeman, the King's fermor. There are also 77 precaria, or "customworks," due from a number of the tenantry, which appear to have been commuted at 3d. each, yielding a further 19s. 3d., and the fines of wapentake were worth 9s. 8d. yearly. There were no receipts in the year in question from the sale of timber in the woods in the manor, which are enumerated as follows:—A wood in Cukrigge, called Mosley, containing by estimation 100 acres, and another wood there, called Cuckerygge woode, with Grymwell bank and Washford Thik, 300 acres; a wood in Adle, called Wetewode, with White Birks and Meanwode, 460 acres; a wood in Brearey, called Brerehasthaye, containing [blank] acres.

There are not many names in the above return which figure in the Poll Tax Return of 1379. The families had no doubt changed largely, but it must be remembered that in 1379 surnames were far from being fixed, and probably more of the families in Adel at the dissolution were of ancient settlement there than appears from the names.

It will be observed that the Arthingtons were among the largest tenants of the Abbey in this neighbourhood. They had, doubtless, as was so often the case elsewhere, been able to obtain leases on very favourable terms when the dissolution was looming in the near future; and like many other ancient connections of religious houses, they afterwards derived great advantage from the purchase of properties of their former landlords. For on the 28th November, 1599, Queen Elizabeth granted to William and Ralph Arthington, sons of Cyril Arthington, of Arthington, in consideration of a sum of £1,193 12s. 4d., the manors of Eccup and Adel, the advowson of the church, and all the lands in Adel, Eccup, and Pool set forth in the Ministers' Account above recited, together with certain other lands which had been enclosed since the dissolution;¹ and with the Arthingtons the manor of Adel and the advowson remained until the present century.²

Cookridge was not included in this grant. The fate of the manor subsequently to the dissolution is chronicled by Thoresby in the Ducatus; this place was of special interest to him from its having then come into the possession of his relatives, the Kirks. After the death of Thomas Kirk, in 1709, the Cookridge estate was sold to the Duchess of Buckingham. Her only son, Edmund, Duke of Buckingham, died 1735, and the Cookridge estate afterwards passed into the possession of his natural brother, Charles Sheffield, created a baronet in 1755. The manor is now the property of the Wormald family.

W. T. LANCASTER.

² The Arthingtons first presented to the living in 1606, when William Arthington nominated the Rev. Robert Thompson, who died 1627, when Robert Hitch, afterwards Dean of York, became rector. He was deprived during the Commonwealth, and William Clarkson and Thomas Sharp held the living successively; the latter was ejected after the Restoration, in 1662, and Dr. Hitch restored. Dr. William Brearey, the next rector, was a son-in-law of Dean Hitch. A list of the subsequent incumbents, to the predecessor of the Rev. C. H. Owen, the present rector, will be found in the Ecclesiæ Leodienses. At the death of Thomas Arthington of Arthington Hall, in 1801, the advowson passed to his daughter, Mrs. Carruthers, of Dormont, afterwards Lady Davy, after whose death it was transferred two or three times, and is now vested in Trustees for presentation. The manor of Adel was also left in trust for Mrs. Carruthers.

INDEX OF PLACES.

The small figures over the number of the page indicate that the name is repeated that number of times in the same page.

The letter "n" denotes that the name is in the notes to the page;
the letter "p" that the name is in the pedigree;
and the letter "i" that the name is in the illustration.
